

Echo Market wraps up 2021 season

Organizer Teres Fair hosted the last market of the season Oct. 2

ECHO — The Echo Market ended the final day of its season Saturday, Oct. 2, as it had every other day throughout its inaugural year — with happy vendors, joyful attendees and one extremely busy organizer.

Teres Fair, Echo Market founder and organizer, rushed from one booth to another as she made sure everyone was satisfied. In the minutes before the market's opening, she hardly had time to take a breath.

"I feel really good. We had a great season," she said.

She, who also owns the Jack Correa Ranch, said she believes the market reached many vendors and visitors who will return next year. Likely, she said, they will spread the word of the market, thereby attracting even more people.

"The big story here is that big things can happen here," Fair said. "We're a small town with a big market."

She also said several other people deserve credit for the community event and the vendors played a big part. Around 40 vendors operated Oct. 2 at the market, which attracted 350-400 attendees.

Mike Duffy, Echo Heritage Association president, expressed his amazement with Fair and the market. He said he was unsure about this event at its outset. Fair promised to "do what she could" with the market, Duffy said, and in the end Fair exceeded every expectation. Duffy said there is "every indication that it's going to work again next year."

Duffy, who has lived in Echo 22 years, said he expects the Echo Market will be his town's signature event. He has seen events come and go, he said, but this one is different. In contrast to some other events, this market is linked to Echo's identity as a small town.

Ruben Harris, local farmer, stands beside his booth Saturday, Oct. 2, 2021, during the last day of the season of the Echo Market. Harris, who brings vegetables to the Echo Market, said he has enjoyed the market.

Having small sellers selling handmade or homegrown goods fits the small-town feel of Echo, Duffy said.

Also, he added, Fair, a local farmer, is the "perfect person" to host such an event. Her contacts, work ethic and passion for Echo all make her a terrific organizer, Duffy said. Though Fair deemed this season a success, she said there is room for growth and next year will be bigger and better.

COMMUNITY BRIEFS

Nez Perce Wallowa Homeland seeks filmmaker/crew

WALLOWA — The Nez Perce Wallowa Homeland is looking to hire a filmmaker/crew to produce a short film about the history of the Tamkaliks Celebration.

After more than 30 years, the Nez Perce have countless memories and stories to share, including many people who were instrumental in planning the first powwow and all of the celebrations to follow. The film will focus on their stories, many of whom are now elders. The mission of the film is to elevate connections to Tamkaliks and the Wallowa Valley, and to preserve the "history in the making" that Tamkaliks represents.

Nez Perce/Native American filmmakers will be given preference in the hiring process. For more information, contact Sara Averbek at sara@wallowanezperce.org or 541-886-3101.

Cemetery Walk highlights history

PENDLETON — People are invited to hear highlights of the interesting lives of some of Pendleton's early residents during the upcoming Olney Cemetery Walk.

A collaboration between the Pendleton Public Library, Pendleton Parks & Recreation, Heritage Station Museum and Pendleton Underground Tours, the event features costumed performers. This walk offers fun for local families and visitors alike.

Hourly sessions are available Friday and Saturday, Oct. 8-9, 4-6 p.m. — some slots already are filled. To register or for more information, contact 541-966-0380 or heather.culley@ci.pendleton.or.us.

Members of the Dirt Dabblers Garden Club accept donations at a giving table on Sept. 21, 2021, in Pendleton for Domestic Violence Services, the nonprofit that helps victims and survivors of domestic violence, sexual assault, dating violence and stalking in Umatilla and Morrow counties.

Dirt Dabblers dig in to help DVS

PENDLETON — Leading up to National Domestic Violence Awareness Month, the Dirt Dabblers Garden Club collected donations for the local program. The club set up a giving table Sept. 21 outside the Vert Club Room, Pendleton, and accepted items for the nonprofit organization.

Domestic Violence Services has served Umatilla and Morrow counties for more than 40 years. It has shelters in Pendleton and Hermiston, as well as advocacy centers in Boardman, lone and Milton-Freewater.

Its mission is to provide help to all victims and survivors of domestic violence, sexual assault, dating violence and stalking. DVS provides safety planning, support groups, training workshops and classes. Services are available in English and Spanish.

In addition to the shelters and advocacy centers, the agency maintains a 24-hour crisis line (800-833-1161).
