What we're into

'BANANAS' PODCAST

When anxiety creeps in and stress clouds my brain, I seek out things that will help me relax and take a break. Sometimes that means snuggling my big orange cat named "Thumbz" and other times it means going for a walk outside in the fresh air. A lot of the time it means putting on headphones and listening to a podcast. I often do this when I'm cleaning or cooking or even sometimes while taking a hot bath. My current favorite to listen to is "Bananas."

This podcast is on the Exactly Right Network, and hosted by best buds, comedian Kurt Braunohler and screenwriter Scotty Landes. The two hosts find the strangest, most obscure news stories and read them aloud to one another during each episode. Sometimes a guest will join them. They have hosted a variety of engaging guests, from people such as American activist Erin Brockovich to actress/comedian Kristen Schaal. If you don't mind goofy and often crude humor, you'll surely be laughing.

Something I particularly enjoy is when host Landes tells personal stories from his and Braunohler's past. As longtime friends who have lived rather colorful lives, it's truly hilarious listening to them reminisce over memories such as floating the Los Angeles River or the tale of Chunk and Chengwin in New York City — you'll just have to listen to know.

You can listen to "Bananas" on Amazon Music and Apple Podcasts. Visit their website to learn more: exactlyrightmedia.com/bananas.

New releases

Jason Moore/Zuma Press/TNS

The band Pavement performs at the 2010 Coachella Valley Music and Arts Festival on April 18, 2010, in Indio, California.

WITH A PAIR OF REISSUES AND A TOUR, PAVEMENT IS BACK

Thirty years ago this week, Pavement released its debut album, "Slanted and Enchanted." Seven years after that, the band dropped its fifth and final LP, "Terror Twilight."

The two records bookended one of the greatest and most influential catalogs of the 1990s: a densely packed stretch of witty, tuneful, sarcastic, sentimental indie rock that produced a real-deal alternative radio hit in 1994's

"Cut Your Hair" and a comically passive-aggressive performance at the first Coachella festival in '99 before the group broke up barely a decade after it started.

Now Pavement — singer-guitarist Stephen Malkmus, guitarist Scott Kannberg, bassist Mark Ibold, drummer Steve West and percussionist Bob Nastanovich — is looking back: This month it reissued "Terror Twilight," for which the band hired producer Nigel Godrich, then hot from his work with Radiohead and Beck, in a deluxe package featuring dozens of outtakes and rarities.

In August the band will rerelease "Slanted and Enchanted" on limited edition vinyl and cassette. And in June the band will hit the road for its second reunion tour following a celebrated comeback run in 2010.
