Pendleton concerts feature "Rising Star" pianist

East Oregonian

portlandyouthphil.org/concerts-tickets.

The oldest continuously operating youth orchestra in the United States, this is the group's first performance in Pendleton, said David Hattner, PYP musical director. The audience, he said, will be treated to both "well-loved and unknown works."

The program will feature Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart's "Piano Concerto in C minor, KV 491," Felix Mendelssohn's "The Hebrides, Op. 26" and Louise Farrenc's "Symphony No. 3, Op. 36."

Sanchez-Werner

In a press release, Sanchez-Werner said Mozart didn't always take the time to write down his cadenzas. This led to improvising the solo passages during performances. He said this results in pianists being able to choose what cadenzas they want to play. The C minor, Sanchez-Werner said, is among the concerti without a written cadenza by Mozart. "Improvising or writing your own cadenza is such a personal statement, and the truest to capturing the Mozartian spirit," the pianist said. "I am excited to have written my own cadenzas for this concerto, and a compelling reason to hear this performance live is that you will hear something new." Also while in the Round-Up City, Sanchez-Werner will present a free recital at Pendleton Center for the Arts. That performance is Monday, May 16, 4:30 p.m. at 214 N. Main St. While there is no charge, those planning to attend must make a reservation. Seating is limited to 100 people. To reserve a seat, visit www.pendletonarts.org or call 541-278-9201.

PENDLETON — Blue Mountain Community College invites the public to view and celebrate the creativity of its students.

The Arts Council of Pendleton raised money for a commissioned piece by Feves for the Vert Auditorium. She died before it was complete, resulting in utilizing the funds to create a gallery in her memory.
