

Daily Mountaineer.

Affecting Anecdote.

On one of the many bridges in Ghent stand two brazen images of father and son, who obtained this distinguished mark of the admiration of their fellow-citizens by the following incident:

Both the father and the son were, for some offence against the State, condemned to die. Some favorable circumstance appearing on the side of the son, he was granted a remission of his sentence under certain provisions; in short, he was offered pardon, on the cruel and barbarous condition that he would become the executioner of his father!

He at first resolutely refused to preserve his life by means so fatal and detestable. This is not to be wondered at; for let us hope for the honor of our nature, that there are very few sons who would not have spurned with abhorrence life sustained on a condition so horrible and unnatural. The son, though long inflexible, yielded at length to the entreaties of a fond parent, who represented to him that his (the father's) life was forfeited, and it would be the greatest possible consolation for him to know that he was the instrument of his son's preservation.

The son consented to adopt the horrible means of recovering his life and liberty; he lifted the axe—but, as it was about to fall, his arm sank nerveless, and the axe dropped from his hand. Had he as many lives as hairs, he could have yielded them all, one after another, rather than again conceive, much less perpetrate such an act. Life, liberty, everything vanished before the dearer interests of filial affection; he fell upon his father's neck, and embracing him, triumphantly exclaimed: "My father, my father! we die together!" and then called for another executioner to fulfil the sentence of the law.

Hard must the hearts be—bereft of every sensation of humanity—which could stand insensible spectators of the scene. A sudden appeal of involuntary applause, mingled with groans and sighs, rent the air. The execution was suspended; and on a simple report of the transaction to the authorities, both were pardoned. High rewards and honors were conferred on the son; and finally those admirable images were raised, to commemorate a transaction so honorable to human nature.

WE THINK SO.—The Oswego Times wants to know if a man has torticollis ancololis of the radius, paralyzation of the iter attestia idquartem, ventriculium, oblibetatum of the laver labli superiosis aliquinnsi, and besides don't feel very well himself, whether he would be exempt from the draft.

SLANDERS issuing from beautiful lips, are like spiders crawling from the blushing heart of a rose.

THERE is no such thing in the world of nature as dumb belles.

IMPOSSIBILITIES, like vicious dogs, fly before him who is not afraid of them.
