

GOLD CREEK, MONTANA TERRITORY.—Gold Creek, or American Fork, is the name of a tributary of Hellgate River, which comes into that stream from the west side, about twelve miles below the Little Blackfoot. The creek carries a few hundred inches of water, and after falling very rapidly from a cluster of remarkably broken, bare, granite peaks, debouches through a high, gravelly bottom, of half a mile in width, into the main Hellgate River. Gold was discovered on this creek, on the flats and gravel points, in 1861, and has been worked ever since to a considerable profit. Some pretty rich gulches were found upon the tributary creeks, and some dozens of men are still at work in them. At the mouth of the creek, a settlement of twenty substantial log-houses was built in 1861-2, and a portion of the houses are now occupied, and a part of them were burnt down last year. Four years ago the Blackfoot Indians infested the adjacent country, and one fortified corral bears marks of where these predatory savages tried to cut away the gate frames, to steal a band of horses which was enclosed in it at night. The gate was built with an iron frame, concealed between two layers of boards, and the Indians patiently cut into the wood until their knives met the iron, when they desisted. This corral witnessed one of those cases of swift, retributive vengeance which so frequently overtakes criminals in the mountains of Montana. The circumstances are these: Two men called at the camp of a man named Bull, who was camped on Elk City prairie, in the Nez Percés mines, in the Fall of 1862, and asked to stay all night. Bull kindly entertained them, and they, with detestable ingratitude, got up in the night and stole five horses and mules from him. Bull, nothing discouraged by the fact that he was sick at the time with ague and fever, started with a friend in pursuit. Crossing the Bitter Root Mountains, one hundred and sixty miles to Fort Owen, he followed them down the Bitter Root River, thirty miles to Hellgate, and seventy-five miles up the Hellgate River to Gold Creek. Twenty days had elapsed and the thieves felt safe from pursuit. When Bull arrived in the camp, he called upon a trader, to whom he had letters explaining his errand, and from him learned that the men were at that time in a neighboring drinking-house. Hastily loading a double-barreled shotgun, Bull, accompanied by the friend who had attended him from Elk City, went over to the drinking-house. This establishment was a low, hewn-log cabin, with a thatched roof, and here were the long sought villains who had set him a-foot. One of them saw Bull, as he came up, and immediately jumped upon a horse, which was hitched to the corral and fled. The other, whose name was Bill Arnett, was dealing a game of monte. As Bull entered the door, Arnett recognized him. Springing to his feet, with his cards in one hand, with the other hand he reached for his pistol. But Bull was too quick for him and brought him to the ground dead, with two charges of buck-shot and slugs. The other man was pursued about ten miles down the river—caught—brought back, and hung on a gallops hastily improvised by two logs laid over the top of the corral, with a cross piece tied on it. Both were buried in a clump of bushes near by, which grew around a stagnant water hole, and Arnett was laid in the grave with the monte cards still grasped in his hand. The verdict of the miners was, "Served 'em right."

"THE BOYS."—We have daily proofs that "the boys" are practising their old tricks. Bogus gold dust operators are about; forgery has been committed, and very small petty larceny is prevalent. It looks as if the boys will never take warning, and quit their ways. Wasco county has been to the expense of sending to the Penitentiary a delegation of forty-five or fifty rogues, great and small, and still they come. There are now at large about fifty rogues of high and low degree, any one of whom is good for a term in State's prison if they return to this county. If the boys will continue to practice rascality in this vicinity, they need not complain if they get a position down below. Wasco county can stand it as well as they can.

THIEVES ABOUT.—The Vancouver Register says that several instances of petty depredations have occurred in that place lately, and in one case a burglary was attempted. It is pretty evident that the boys are around nearly everywhere, and citizens will do well to be upon their guard at the towns up the Columbia and below. The Vigilantes of Montana are driving on to this side of the mountains more than our share of the vicious elements of society.

BOGUS DUST.—A man was arrested by Marshal Keeler yesterday morning for exhibiting, with the apparent intention of increasing the volume of currency, a purse of brass filings. He alleges that he is perfectly innocent, and in fact the childish attempt to pass such a miserable imitation of gold dust as he had in possession, argues an amount of innocent simplicity quite uncommon in these times. He was discharged.

A PROMINENT San Francisco paper is accused of keeping a man whose business appears to be to wait upon newly arrived theatrical artists, and inform them that the journal to which he is attached is the leading authority on all questions connected with the drama. This is looked upon as an "intimation."
