KIT CARSON-HIS PERSONAL AP. PEARANCE.-Kit Carson and Col. Bent called on Gen. Pope this morning at 10 o'clock, and had a somewhat lengthy interview. From a hurried glance of the famous mountaineer, while waiting a few moments in the antercom at headquarters, we judged him to be a man below the medium size, rather squat in stature, of compact, iron frame, and a countenance besprinkled with slight wrinkles, betokening an expression of great determination and reserved power. He appeared reserved, modest, and of a retiring nature, as is often characteristic of men of positive character. His countenance was bronzed from exposure, and a gentleman who met him said, "There goes an Indian." Kit was dressed in a Colonel's uniform, with rather broad shoulder-straps, and his dark hair, slightly sprinkled with gray, flowed down upon his shoulders a la waterfall. He wore a rather broadbrimmed felt, and altogether presented the appearance of a sturdy little man, destitute of all pretensions. Word soon came from Gen. Pope to admit the two gentlemen into his private room, and Kit took off his felt hat and gently bowed himself into the presence of the Commanding General. Col. Carson served as a Brigadier under Gen. Crocker, in New Mexico.—St. Louis News, October 27.

A was named "Russian John," says the Advertiser, fell from the gang-plank of a schooner lying at Umatilla, on the night of the 4th inst., and broke several ribs, besides suffering severe contusions.
