

MORE CAVE DISCOVERIES OF HUMAN REMAINS IN ENGLAND.—The discovery of fossil human remains in a cave in the Ryhope colliery, in England, have already been announced, but the London Times gives the following additional particulars:

A great additional quantity of human and other animal remains has been discovered in the Ryhope colliery cave within the last few days, and as it has not yet been fully explored, or its termination reached, it is likely that still more will be found as the quarrymen go on with their work. Among the bones dug up on Thursday last, are two adult human skulls, male and female, the lower jaw-bone of a child of five or six years old, and a number of other bones, almost enough to construct another skeleton. The dimensions of the adult skulls are as follows: Circumference of both, 21 1/2 inches; across the posterior lobe, 6 inches and 5 1/2 inches; and across the anterior, 5 inches and 4 1/2 inches. There are also more bones of badgers, foxes, cats, rabbits, etc. Including what has been carried off by the workmen and visitors, there must have been several bushels dug up in all. Several bits of charred wood have been found, and also a chip of wood, clean cut with a very sharp axe, indicating the date of the human remains within a few centuries. In a little recess near the roof of the cave was discovered a number of small bones of different kinds, evidently placed there by hand, just such a depository as a girl playing at house-keeping might be supposed to make. Some of the ox bones appear to have been broken with a hammer, and one of them bears the mark of having been sawn through. The most probable conjecture now is, that these relics are those of a family of thieves or robbers, or of refugees from invasion or persecution, and that they had met their death suddenly and unexpectedly—perhaps by suffocation, like the Macdonalds of the Isle of Eigg, or the hands of the chief of Macleod, or the Arabs in the cave of Dabra, at the hands of those of Gen. Ramoriciere. There would be plenty of brushwood near for the accomplishment of such a purpose.

CONCERNING RAT'S TAILS.—Some experiments in what is termed animal grafting have recently been described by Dr. Berl in a paper forwarded to the French Academy of Science. He says, "that if the tail of a rat be cut off, skinned, and then inserted under the skin of the same animal, it will continue to live and grow as before. If a fracture is effected, the fractured parts will join again exactly as they would if the tail were in its natural place; in short, both physiologically and pathologically the grafted part follows the general laws of nature."

In St. Petersburg, Russia, crowds of people rush to one of the theatres to see an English sailor, who professes to have been tattooed when in captivity among the savages of one of the Pacific islands, and who appears in what is termed "the costume of a cannibal."

ACCORDING to Gerald Massey, nearly all of Shakespeare's sonnets were written for the Earl of Southampton, the rest for William Harpert, and the story of Shakespeare keeping a mistress of whom he was robbed by his friend, vanishes into thin air.

STANTON AND BEECHER.—On the occasion of the late visit of Henry Ward Beecher to Washington, Secretary Stanton presented him with a Brevet Lieutenant-Colonelcy for his son, who is serving as First Lieutenant in the 4th Regular Artillery regiment.
