

LIBERTY OF THE PRESS.—Though all the winds of doctrine were let loose to play upon the earth, so truth be in the field, we do injuriously, by licensing and prohibiting, to misdoubt her strength. Let her and falsehood grapple: who ever knew truth to be put to the worst in a free and open encounter? Her confuting is the best and surest suppressing. What a collision is this when we are exhorted by the wise man to use diligence, "to seek for wisdom as for hidden treasures," early and late; and another order shall enjoin us to know nothing but by statute! When a man hath been laboring the hardest labor in the deep mines of knowledge, hath drawn forth his reasonings, as it were a battle ranged, scattered and defeated, all objections in his way, calls out his adversary into the plain, offers him the advantage of wind and sun, as he pleases only that he may try the matter by dint of argument; for the opponents then to skulk, to lay ambushments, to keep a narrow bridge of licensing, where the challenger should pass, though it be valor enough in soldiership, is but weakness and cowardice in the war of Truth. For who knows not that Truth is strong next to the Almighty? She needs no policies, nor stratagems, nor licensings, to make her victorious, those are shifts that Error uses against her power: give her but room, and do not bind her when she sleeps.—John Milton.

SINGULAR WORK OF SKILL.—A philadelphia named Swander has produced two remarkable specimens of pen-portraiture. The one is a copy of the Declaration of Independence, written with such variations of light and heavy strokes as to embody a phantom likeness of Washington, the whole being surrounded by clever imitations of the original signatures; the other giving the Emancipation Proclamation in a manuscript which discloses a shadow portrait of President Lincoln. The figures can be recognized at a glance, and yet the picture is formed entirely by the size and arrangement of the written words, with the exception of some slight shading about the eyes, nose and mouth.
