

Chicago, April 19.—President Johnson, in reply to a serenade from the soldiers and sailors, last evening, said: We are involved in the most critical and trying struggles that have occurred since this Government came into existence. The Government has another trial still to go through that is to give evidence to the nations of the earth and its own citizens that it has power enough to put down treachery at home and treason within its own borders. [Cheers.] We have commenced that struggle, and I trust in God we will pass through it successfully. The organized and combined powers that recently stood arrayed against us are disbanded and driven from the field, but it does not follow that there are no enemies and traitors against our present form of Government and our institutions. I stand in the Senate of the United States, denying the doctrine of secession. I think I have given some evidence that I have been sincere and in earnest, and now I want to know why it is that the whole pack of slanderers are snapping at my heels. [Cheers.] Why is it they array themselves against me? Is it because I stand on the side of the people? and when I say the people I include soldiers and sailors. [Cheers.] Why is it they arrayed in traducing and vilifying and calumniating me? Where were they during the rebellion? [A voice—"at home in bed."]

A great deal was done in Tennessee under my predecessor. We commenced the work together; we succeeded before I assumed my present position in restoring the troubles which had existed between Tennessee and the rest of the Union with one exception, and that was representation. I came to Washington under extraordinary circumstances and succeeded to the Presidency. What then? Congress had adjourned without presenting any plan. I then proceeded, as I have been doing in my own State, to restore the other States. We found the people had no courts, and we said to the Judges, District Attorneys and Marshals: Go down and hold your courts; the people need that the tribunals of justice shall be opened. Was that wrong? The courts were opened. We looked about and saw that the people down there had no mails. They had been interrupted and cut off by the rebellion. We said to the Postmaster General, let the people have mail facilities and then they will begin to understand that we all feel and think that we are one people. We looked about and saw that there was a blockade, that the custom houses were closed, and we said let the doors of the custom houses be opened and remove the blockade. Let trade and commerce be restored, and it was done. We thus traveled, opening custom-houses, restoring mails, and re-establishing all the customs that had been interrupted by the rebellion. Was there anything here that was not authorized by the constitution and justified by the great necessities of the case? Now what remains to be done? It is to admit their representatives. [Cheers.] When we say admit representatives in a constitutional and law-abiding sense as we intended at the beginning of the Government, all that is needed is for the Houses respectively to determine the question. But some one will say, a traitor might come in. The answer to that is, that each House must be the judge; and when traitors present themselves cannot either House know that they are traitors? Cannot they kick them out doors and send them back, saying to the people who sent them, you must send loyal men? [Cheers, and a voice, that's logic.] What is the difficulty about that? None. [Cheers.] If a traitor presents himself to either House, cannot that House say no, you cannot be admitted into either body; go back; we will not deny your people representation, but they must send us loyal representatives. [Cheers.] When the State does send loyal representatives can you have any better loyalty? While I have been contending against traitors, treason, secession and dissolution of the Union, I have been at the same time contending against the consolidation of power here. I think that the consolidation of power here is equally dangerous with the separation of the States. That one would not be better used and might run into anarchy, while the other would concentrate and entail even monarchy. But there is an idea abroad that one man can be a despot, that one man can be an usurper, but that one or two hundred men cannot. Mr. Jefferson, the apostle of liberty, tells us, and so does common sense, that despotism can be exercised by many more rigorously than by one. What power has your President? What can he do? What can he originate? Why, they say he exercises the veto power. What is the veto power? [A voice—a vote to put down the nigger.—Laughter.] Who is President? [Voices—Andy Johnson.] Is he not elected by the people? The President is nothing more than the Tribune of the people—the office a Tribune in character. In olden times when the Roman Senate was encroaching on the people's rights, and putting its heels of power on the necks of the people, the people chose a Tribune and placed him at the door of the Senate, so that when that power ventured such an act he was clothed with power to say "Veto; I forbid." Your President now is the Tribune of his people. I thank God, and intend to assert the power which the people have placed in my hands.
