

BURIED BEFORE BIRTH.—The duke of Alba, the brother-in-law of Napoleon III., is a short, little man, who has something icy about his whole manner. Small and weak, his face displays an alabaster hue, which gives him a ghost-like aspect. In Spain the story is current that the duke was buried before he was born. When his mother was eniente with him she was taken so desperately ill that all the attempts to restore her remained fruitless. The duchess died far away from Madrid, at a chateau which had always been her favorite residence. She was buried in the family vault; and, as it is the custom of the Spanish nobility, several valuables, among others her rings, were put into the coffin. The treasure which had been left to oblivion with the duchess aroused the cupidity of some ruffians; they broke into the vault on the night following the funeral, robbed the dead woman, and would not leave the coffin till they had plucked a flashing diamond from the finger of the corpse. The diamond was on the little finger and would not come off. This gave the body-snatchers the truly cannibal idea of cutting the finger. The pain aroused the apparently dead woman, she came to her senses, sat up in the coffin, and by her unexpected awakening put the robbers to flight. When they departed they forgot to close the vault. The duchess found sufficient strength to quit her coffin and return to the chateau where she was at first taken for a ghost, and a priest was called in to exorcise it; but as he was unable to banish the spectre, the people in the chateau gradually began to believe in her corporeal existance. The duchess recovered and gave birth to a boy, who has never lost the deathly pallor which he brought into this world with him.

LIFE DOWN SOUTH.—A Mississippi letter says:

Dueling and murder are still in vogue. Shooting and stabbing are fearfully frequent. Human life is of little value. A man sinks beneath the tide, and there is scarce a "note of his departure." Helms and Garland of the upper-circle aristocracy shot each other in the national Bank in this city. Both died in a few days from the effects of their wounds. The affair created but little excitement, and was barely mentioned by the papers. A Mr. Bonner supposed himself insulted by an engineer on the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Western Railroad, handed him a pistol, went off and procured another for himself, returned and told the engineer one of them must die. The engineer fired first, and Bonner was instantly killed. Only a few days since, one of the papers of this city stated that the citizens of Pontotoc county were having "an old fashioned drive" after horse and mule thieves, and that day they had lynched and hung or shot seven of the number. This trivial affair was allowed a six or eight line notice.
