LAST MOMENTS OF DANIEL S. DICKINSON.—When he received the intelligence, only two hours before his death, that his disease would in all human probability prove fatal, and that the end was fast approaching, he heard it with perfect calmness, and said to his wife, taking her hand: "Let us meet it like Christians." After expressing the deepest affection for, and sending messages of love to absent members of his family and affectionate advice to his fatherless grandsons, he became weaker—so rapidly that he had little opportunity for speech. As he felt the time was near, he said: "I am faint"—"significant"—the conflict is strong, but the other side is ours." Then raising himself in a sitting posture, and leaning against his brother-in-law, he gently breathed his last in perfect calmness, and apparently without suffering. Mr. Dickinson had nominated just prior to his decease, his wife and brother, as the executrix and executor of his last will and personal property. After a union of 44 years with this estimable, lady the dying husband clothed her with his wealth, as an evidence that up to his dying moment she held the first place in his earthly affections.—Binghamton Republican.

ARREST OF A CALIFORNIA ROBBER IN NEW YORK.—The following particulars of the arrest of the man who robbed Collector Adams, of Oregon, are given: On the arrival of the steamship Santiago de Cuba from Greytown at New York, April 12th, she was met in the lower bay by a boat containing a detachment of the New York detective police, who proceeded to overhaul the ship on the strength of a telegraphic dispatch from San Francisco, charging one John Lambert with having robbed Collector Adams, of Oregon, of $20,500, on the passage from Astoria to San Francisco, February 3d, on board the steamer Oregon.—When the New York detectives reached the deck of the steamship, one of the first persons whom they met was the object of their search. He was at once taken into custody, very much to his surprise, and, together with his baggage, taken to police headquarters. On searching his trunks, the sum of $4,520 in double eagles, and $300 in greenbacks, together with $15,000 in California mining stocks, were found, the proceeds without doubt of the robbery. The accused is detained to await the requisition of Governor Low of California. He is a native of England, aged 24 years, and refuses to say anything about the robbery.

A LOSING GAME.—Lieut. M. F. Maury, late of Mexico, has been heard from at Paris, where he is writing letters to the London papers, setting forth the losses of the South in the late rebellion. He puts the sum total down at $7,000,000,000, as follows:

By emancipation.....	$3,000,000,000
Expenses of the war.....	2,000,000,000
Loss of private property.....	1,000,000,000
Taxation, including that for Federal War Debt.....	1,000,000,000

Total..... $7,000,000,000

"This $7,000,000,000," says the Lieutenant, "was the accumulated wealth of centuries; it constituted the whole industrial plant and capital of the South." The Lieutenant is positioning the rebel sympathizers of France and England to help the Southerners carry this immense load.—Perhaps he would like to be the custodian of the relief fund—it will be very large—as he was of the Mexican Emigration Fund.
