GERMAN NAVAL BASE SOUGHT NEAR BRAZIL
 Warships Anchored Off Northern Coast Find Excellent Hiding Place From Boats of Enemy.
 (By United Press to the Bend Bulletin)
RIO DE JANEIRO, April 19.—After numberless rumors and unconfirmed reports regarding naval bases said to have been established by German raiders and submarines on the coast of Brazil, what appears to be a reliable story of such a base has reached this city. The story is vouched for by Colonel Jose Maria da Silva, proprietor of a large plantation on the Ilha de Maraca, which is said to have been the rendezvous of several German ships at various times since the beginning of the war. The Ilha de Macara is separated from the northern coast of Brazil by the Carrapaparis Channel. Three German warships anchored in this channel for several days during the first year of the war, and have used the hiding place several times since, the last time being during February this year.
 He declared that fresh meat was furnished the ships by several cattle raisers, that the ships took water and made repairs. Tropical jungle climbs precipitous slopes of land so that ships, masts or funnels are completely obscured when the ship lies close in to shore.
 Colonel Silva reported that officers from the first German ships to use the hiding place embarked in gasoline launches and made careful soundings of the channel and the entire neighborhood of the island, and that they made detailed maps from their observations.
 With the publishing of Colonel Silva's statements, the Brazilian cruiser "Tymbra" was despatched to gain. Address Box 349, Bend, Ore. 36-09tfc the scene to verify the story and protect Brazilian neutrality.

 Reports indicating that the raiders are still active in the South Atlantic continue to arrive, the latest being a telegram from Belem, a city near the mouth of the Amazon, saying that a naval battle had been fought within sight of that city. The report stated that it was believed that the engagement was fought between the French cruiser Greydon and the German raider.
