at the end of five years, firmly convinced that her mission in life is to have her revenge on Judge Marcus (William H. Tonker), the man who sentenced her unjustly.

with the original, but seeing her enjoying the gay Bohemian life which he does not understand, turns him against her. The young Englishman is the first of her many admirers with whom she is sincerely in love. She writes many notes of explanation after he has lost faith in her, but they are returned unopened. How she saves his sister from the clutches of a married man, how her love leads her to abandon her profession and into poverty, and how the tangled threads are finally unraveled and she is restored to the man she loves, are brought about in an interesting and gripping manner.

In this way the girl begins a friendship with the man on whom she wants to work vengeance. Marcus persuades his wife (Alice May) to employ Anne as a companion. This free entrance into the house shows her for the first time the ever-widening gap that exists between the Judge and Mrs. Marcus. Anne bends all her efforts to make this gulf even broader.

As the charming young model, Miss Martin has an opportunity to display a number of exquisite gowns and frocks which will be of especial in-

At the Movies

Grand Theatre.
 A theme of revenge, conceived in the bitterness of a moment of sorrow, keeping dominant throughout a long term of years, and finally spending its force only after it is about to accomplish its purpose, lends its interest to the newest Virginia Pearson picture which William Fox has produced. "Bitter Truth."
 Annie, the part which Miss Pearson portrays, is an inhabitant of Blossom street. Everyone who knows the filth and poverty of the slums will realize what that means. She is the typical girl of the East Side, and she has her typical lover, Jimmy Graves, a crook (Jack Hopkins).
 When Annie learns that the police are on Jimmy's trail, she hurries to warn him. But she is caught with him. Both are imprisoned, and the grain of bitterness is implanted in the girl's heart. She leaves the jail

Handy Literature.
 Sanderson found it very hard work selling books. The volumes he had to offer, one of which he had to carry with him as a sample, were very heavy, and nobody seemed to want them. But he was a persistent man, and even the stubborn Mrs. Bowling could not send him away unheard. "We have all the books we can use," she said, "and we really can't afford any more reading matter. Why, I haven't even opened the second volume of that Roman history you sold us last spring. Now, if you were selling one of those adjustable ironing boards"—"I've got just the thing!" said Sanderson cheerfully. "There are twelve books in this set, and you can use either one or two or three, and so on up to six, to tilt your board any way you want to. And between whites when your iron is heating you have good literature to refresh your mind."
