Liberty Theatre.
During the early part of his stage career, Mr. Behan devoted himself almost entirely to comedy and his entrance into the more serious form of dramatic art came about through one of the little circumstances that so often change a man's whole life. He had heard a recitation in verse of a little Italian child, "Rosa." The simple little story appealed so to Mr.

Behan that one night at a large beef-steak dinner in Chicago, he found himself telling a dialect. It was his first bit of serious acting, and the hit it made caused him to include it in his repertoire. Later he wrote a sketch around the idea and called it "The Sign of the Rose." It was an instantaneous hit as was the motion picture, "An Allen," which he wrote from the same theme and which became one of the marked successes of the screen world. Mr. Behan's appears on Thursday and Friday at the Liberty Theatre in "Lost in Transit," his newest Paramount Picture photoplay.

The Liberty Theatre announces that the new Mary Pickford-Artercraft picture, "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," adapted from the famous book and play of the same name, by Kate Douglas Wiggin and Charlotte Thompson, will be at that popular playhouse on Sunday and Monday. The announcement of this film has attracted considerable interest among the particular admirers of Mary Pickford, as well as the many thousands who have read the charming story or seen the play.

To express the personality of a woman so mysterious as Theda Bara, the world-famed William Fox screen star, in a medium so evasive and elusive as a perfume, has been the task of Ann Haviland, a perfume artist of note. Mrs. Haviland has been able to duplicate the secrets of the physicians and alchemists of old, whose wonderful perfumes and incense are practically a lost art. She has after great difficulty evolved a perfume for Miss Bara which blends to a remarkable degree Miss Bara's mysterious and dual personality.

"Theda Bara is the most mysterious and fascinating woman who has ever come to me for a perfume to match her personality," said Mrs. Haviland. "The very first impression you get of Miss Bara is one of eeriness. She seems to glide into a room like a vapor, giving the observer a thrill that manifests itself in little gasps and the drawing in of the breath. In departing she leaves the same weird feeling.
"As a base for the mixture for Miss Bara I made a perfume of oil, woods and gums of Persia. This is to typify her orientalism, her gliding, snake-like charm, her mysticism, her allurements. For her better nature I combined a perfume of pomegranate blossoms exuding a sweet scent of velvety sweetness and charm, typifying the depth of her soul and also radiating warmth. When mixed with the ingredients composing the baser personality, it sent forth a subtle perfume, haunting in its odor, which truly symbolized and will always be associated with Theda Bara's dual personality.

"Theda Bara," concluded Mrs. Haviland, "the greatest and most mysterious screen star in the world today, has a perfume that will never be duplicated by any other living woman. It typifies her consummate art as an actress, her soul and her mys-
