MILLER LIKES WORK AT CAMP

FORMER BEND PHYSICIAN WRITES TO FRIENDS HERE TELLING OF TRAINING AT WASHINGTON POST.

Everybody at Camp Lewis swings picks, even to the officers, in making trenches, dugouts and hospital camps, according to Lieut. Dwight F. Miller, former Bend physician, in a letter to J. D. Davidson of this city. The letter follows:

"Dear Jim:
"Well, at last I am going to write you a line to let you and the brothers and fellows know that one Dwight F. Miller is in existence and hale and hearty; able to take chow T. I. D. We have been up here "fighting the battle of Camp Lewis ever since Sept. 6th, '17." I was expecting to go overseas very soon after reaching camp, as were we all, and everything has panned out differently so far that I have felt a little queer as to relating my experiences to you fellows.
"However, I can tell you that we have some organization here and if later they ever get the Huns up on top of the ground you will probably hear of us. Our training is very interesting and consists of cavalry drill, signalling, range firing, night driving, gas school, pistol shooting, outpost formation, and it seems to me sometimes about all the whole business except the navy dope. We make maps, dig dugouts, trenches, erect field hospitals both above and beneath the ground. And everybody swings the pick, including the officers. Of course this is done at officers' school and later we teach the men. But, Jim, it's the real thing, believe me. Then at the close of day when the men turn in for the night I have to attend the clinics and lectures at the base hospital and a day for me usually begins at 5:45 a. m. and ends at 10 p. m.
"Last week we were out on manoeuvres and I carried a 40-pound pack and hiked 28 miles. So you can see a fellow has to get into shape or he just dies right here. I want you to know that I like it and that I feel very glad to be back in good shape physically. Besides a fellow begins to feel like he had learned something that will be of service to his nation and is getting "hard boiled," which is the correct vernacular.
"They had me in a little worry at first around here for they thought of course coming from Eastern Oregon that I was a 'roundup' performer with a reputation as a horseman and a revolver shot. But I have never been very unlucky as yet, for the horse I ride is a fine, sensible fellow, and he is very careful for me. He looked at me and said, 'Doc, now be careful as you can and I won't let you fall off.' I have the outfit developed so far. At shooting the practice that L. A. W. Nixon and I used to hold occasionally out of Bend a ways stood me in great hand and I have shot some good targets for an amateur. And at driving the ambulances I am an authority. A fellow who ever navigated that Bend country with a machine like the old one I used to drive has had some experience in driving, blacksmithing and machine shop practice that they couldn't approach in any country on earth, don't you think?
"Well, Jim, this is very much all about myself, but I am going to close now, and please give my kind regard and affection to the members of Bend lodge. I visit often in Tacoma and am next door to the Masonic ambulance company that came into the service from San Francisco. But I sure would like to drop in at home, for Bend lodge will always be home to me.
"With kindest regards to you, Jim. I am,

MAKING BEST OF ALFALFA CROP

SAVING LEAVES AND STEMS MAIN ITEM IN TIME AND METHOD OF CUTTING AND CURING.

O. A. C. EXPERIMENT STATION, Corvallis, May 18.—Alfalfa farmers will find that they can best meet the present hay shortage by cutting and curing their 1918 crops at the time and in the manner that will save the largest amount possible and make the best hay.

"Within two or three weeks," says Prof. G. R. Hyslop of O. A. C. experiment station, "alfalfa hay will be ready for making. Hay stocks have been reduced during the winter and spring, and farmers are called on to meet the situation as best they can.
"Some growers in sections where hay is sold by volume—the tonnage being determined by measuring the stack—have followed the practice of allowing the hay to become over-ripe and woody so that it bulks up larger. This practice not only tends in some cases to reduce a four-crop country to three crops a year, but makes the hay coarse and woody. Its value is thus reduced and a large amount of it is wasted.
"The best part of alfalfa for hay purposes is the leaves and fine parts. To save these parts it is necessary to cut the alfalfa for hay when it is about one-tenth in bloom or when the new shoots begin budding out from the crown.
"Rake the hay as soon as it is well wilted; cure rapidly in the windrow or cock, and get into the stack or under cover with least possible exposure to sun and rain.
"Hay efficiency or value depends much on its time of cutting, thoroughness and rapidity of curing, freedom from exposure and the saving of leaves and fine stems."
