

ALWAYS LAND OF TROUBLE

Barbaric Invasion and Czarism Have Molded Russian History, to People's Sorrow.

The backwardness of the Russians can be pretty adequately accounted for by three historical factors. There is, first, the Mongol yoke which rested upon them for nearly two and a half centuries. During the wonderful thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, while England was establishing her parliament and democratic models were being worked out in the free self-governing city states of Italy and the low countries, the Russians lay flattened under an alien Asiatic despotism. By the time they had rid themselves of the Mongols all legal rights of individuals, local communities and social classes had disappeared, leaving the power of the czars unlimited.

In the second place, for a long time after the Muscovites had freed themselves from the Mongols, their settlements in the rich treeless steppes to the south of them—the famous "black soil" destined to become the granary of Russia and, indeed, of Europe—were exposed to raids by the nomad Tartars hemming them on the east and south. Until the days of Peter the Great the Russians were for the most part confined to the less fertile forested region of the North, where they were safe from the incursions of the nomads. Let one imagine how our economic development would have suffered had our ancestors been confined to the wooded region of the upper Ohio and the Great Lakes because the fertile prairies from Indiana to the Rocky mountains lay open to the raids of barbarian horsemen welling up from the great populated area in the Southwest!

Then there was the Romanoff autocracy, which in Shakespeare's day crushed the bulk of the people down into serfdom—which later became slavery—and kept them there for two and a half centuries.—Edward Alsworth Ross in Asa Magazine.

APPEALED TO GIRL'S VANITY

Department Store Clerk Proved That He Had Some Little Knowledge of Human Nature.

Among nonessential citizens, a place must be given to the summer girl who does all her swimming on the beach, in silken togs which never could stand the cruel ocean waves. Whether this type is still in existence or not is a question, but at any rate a conversation overheard recently in a department store gives ground for suspicion. The ambitious clerk was selling a high-priced bathing suit and was managing the operation in a masterful way. She finally pinned her victim, a fluff girl, down to a choice between two; one was blue with green trimmings, the other purple with white.

"Do you ever have photos taken in your bathing suit?" asked the clerk.

"Why, sometimes," said the girl, mystified.

"Well," said the inspired clerk, "the reason I ask is because often girls have said that they want suits with contrasting colors because they show up so much better in the pictures. That's why you might like this purple with the white border better than the other, which wouldn't show up nearly so well. I didn't know whether you had thought about it or not, but often girls do have their pictures taken on the beach, you know."—Indianapolis News.

Surely a "Real Lady."

The caddy was brought before the magistrate for using violent language to a lady.

"But she ain't no lady," he protested fiercely.

"Indeed!" quoth his worship. "And do you know a lady when you see one?"

"Of course I do!" indignantly answered the man. "Why, only the other day I saw one; she give me a parcel note for a shillen' fare and walked away. 'I, mibs, I calls, 'what about yer change?' 'Don't be a blinkin' old fool!' sez she; 'keep it, and git drunk enough to kiss yer mother-in-law!'"

"Now, yer worship," he ended, triumphantly, "that's what I call a real lady."—London Tit-Bits.

Etiquette in Mexico.

Travelers through Mexico report many peculiar customs which reflect the temperament of the people. Some of these are founded upon superstitions hundreds of years old while others date from more recent days. There is a prevailing belief in the country that there is bad luck in a sequence of three and wherever possible the combination of three is avoided. This is shown very often to persons strange to the land in the lighting of a cigarette.

In the United States one often sees three men light their pipe from one match. It would be a gross insult in Mexico to offer a man a light from a match that had already started two cigarettes going. Instead one must blow out the match and give him a light from the ignited coffin nail.

Frogs That Have Hair.

"Finer than frog hair" has long been a slang method of expressing the superlative degree. Doubtless no one ever gave it a thought whether frogs have hair or not. Probably no one ever realized they did until Prof. G. A. Boulenger discovered in the German Congo frogs that had growing upon their bodies either hair or a very good imitation of it. It has since developed that anatomically it is not hair, in the sense in which that term applies to mammals. Our own hair is akin to finger nails; it is a horny growth, whereas the "hair" on the African frogs is an abnormal development of the tubercles that appear on the skin of the ordinary frog. The ordinary person, however, who places appearance above origin, will doubtless call it "hair."

Health of Prisoners.

Those who study prisons and try to find out why men get there will be interested in this news from New York city. Out of 1,600 men of military age registered on June 5 in penal institutions of that city less than 5 per cent were physically fit for service. In Blackwell's Island prison not one was fit for the army. Every one was a physical discard. A great many persons who have studied such things much will say that perhaps the physical condition of these young men may be the chief reason for their presence in prison. And most of us feel quite sure that fine, healthy bodies and normal minds are most likely to keep their owners out of prison. It is with some satisfaction that we reflect upon the fact that this war will do a great deal to make human bodies stronger and healthier—and to that extent make prisons useless.—Illinois State Journal.

Didn't Count.

Lord Reading, the British ambassador, said at a New York reception: "The war is doing away with snobishness. Snobishness of an incredible sort used to flourish in England, but I'm glad to say that it is melting away in the fires of our democratic war."

"They tell a story of English snobishness. A certain noble lady at a very smart dinner party worried because there were 13 at the table. But her host, a duke, bent toward her and said in a loud, hearty, reassuring voice:

"'Calm yourself, dear Lady Emily, Mr. Plume, the novelist, on your right, is not really one of us. He belongs to the lower middle class.'"

Iron Crosses Galore.

According to the Vossische Zeitung 135,000 Iron Crosses of the first class have been awarded up to the present, and over 4,500,000 of the second class. To civilians 6,500 Iron Crosses have been granted. Besides the Kaiser, Field Marshals von Hindenburg and von Mackensen, Prince Leopold of Bavaria and General Landwehr were the Grand Cross of the Iron Cross. The Bluecher Cross is worn only by Field Marshal von Hindenburg.
