MEAT PRICES.

Two hundred and sixty-five million pounds of meat, canned by the big packers and sold to the war department for the use of American soldiers, but no longer needed, are to be kept off the market at the request of the packers. They fear that if it is sold it will "seriously affect prices."

This may be good argument for the packers, but if there is anything the American people want today more than anything else it is something that will seriously affect prices—prices of most everything, including meat. They would welcome a reduction in the price of meat. They would like meat at a few cents less per pound than what they are paying now.

During the war, while the packers were putting up these millions of pounds of meat for the army, the law of supply and demand operated on what was left and prices went up, up, up, until many an American home was observing meatless days at the demand of Mr. Pocketbook, to say nothing of Mr. Hoover. We were told that when the war was over prices would begin to drop, but at the first sign of a chance to lower meat prices along come the packers and persuade the war department to keep off the market the meat that made us pay high prices a year ago and might let us pay lower prices now.

We have no especial interest in seeing the meat packers lose money, but it is interesting, to say the least, to see the tender solicitude shown for their profits by the government.
Most other businesses have to take their chances with the law of supply and demand. The packers suspend the operation of the law when it affects them.

We have never noticed any hesitation on the part of the forest service to place timber on the market whenever they were ready and without reference to the general lumber situation.

The other day we tried something in the line of the 10 little injun verse. Now comes George Harvey, in Harvey's Weekly, with the same idea, but much better done, as follows:

"Five Peace Commissioners behind a close-locked door;
One asked race equality, and then there were but four.
Four Peace Commissioners discussing Adria's Sea;
One demanded Flume, and then there were but three.
Three Peace Commissioners wondering what to do;
One went home to end a strike, and then there were but two.
Two Peace Commissioners with treaty not half done; One said: "May I not get out?" and then there was but one.
One Peace Commissioner enjoying sweet release,
Read the Huns the riot act, and then the world had peace."

The program given by the Red-

Stewart, Roy Roberts, Henry Hansen, having a fine time and being royally entertained by the Prineville knights.

Mrs. Evans' parents, Mr. and Mrs.
Noble, of Quincy, Michigan, were

A LITTLE TREE.

I never see a little tree peeping confidingly up among the withered leaves without wondering what trials and triumphs it will have. I hope it will live with rapture in the flower opening days of spring; that it will be a home for birds; and that it will find life worth living and live long to better and to beautify the earth. If it is cut down may it become the ridge log of a cabin where love will abide, or if it must be burned, I hope it will blaze on the hearthstone of a home where children play in the firelight on the floor.—Enos A. Mills.
