methods of cultivation and too many methods of handling spuds to make the business successful. Too many farmers have tried to make irrigation take the place of proper cultivation.

"As a solution to the little potato disease which seems to be affecting many of your fields, I recommend the use of corrosive sublimate, rotation of crops, potatoes one year and another root crop a succeeding year, with silage crops preceding the seeding of potatoes. The disease is one of the soil and must be eradicated by seed treatment and soil purification." Mr. Larson advocated greater care of seed while storing.

Silo Helps Farmer.

"The silo may be likened to the savings bank. It makes interest for the farmer who uses it to deposit his crops. There are approximately 1200 silos in Oregon," said Prof. Fitts of the Oregon Agricultural college, speaking on "Silos and Silage," but there is a present need of 5000 in this state. It looks as if Central Oregon is going to contribute its quota toward that number. The most important development in agriculture in the last decade," he said, "is the development of the silo and the preparation of ensilage. Every farm on which stock is raised should have a silo." Prof. Fitts urged the use of alfalfa with root crops as ensilage, and stated that sunflowers were rapidly becoming more popular in sections where corn cannot be raised owing to climatic conditions. Ensilage is the most economical ration that can be fed to all livestock. The silo will be one of the great contributors to bigger, better and more marketable livestock.

Prof. Fitts also strongly urged the farmers to get in line with the great country-wide movement for "better sires, better stock." The farmer, like the banker, he pointed out, should change his methods of doing business as quickly as he finds that the methods he is using are not profitable.

Better Stock Urged.

Linking up with the talk made by Prof. Fitts, O. M. Plummer, manager of the Pacific International Livestock exposition at Portland, suggested that along with the movement for more silos the farmers should be mindful that hand in hand goes better stock to which ensilage should be fed. Mr. Plummer pointed out the superiority of western livestock on the market over eastern or foreign livestock and said that Oregon livestock held first place with the livestock of any other state and that this condition prevailed with the stock from Eastern and Central Oregon. Mr. Plummer urged the cooperation of the farmers of Central Oregon in making the forthcoming livestock show at Portland a big success for this fall.

Plea for Americanism Made.

Ringed with sincerity and thoroughly genuine in spirit, B. F. Irvine, of the Oregon Journal, paid a glowing tribute to the institutions of American government and pleaded for their perpetuation under the new ideals of Americanism, for which more than 50,000 American lives were given on Flanders battlefields. That the influences of foreign nations now permeated with anarchism should never obtain a foothold to overthrow the institutions of American government were dwelt upon in high praise of the new idea of responsibility which will obtain in our form of government. Mr. Irvine believes American institutions will be perpetuated because in this country there is a higher moral, intellectual and ethical consciousness which will not permit this country to revert back to tribal conditions, the direction toward which countries like Russia are bent. At length Mr. Irvine recited the purging influences in our government for the last 40 years, and spoke with confidence that these purifying influences are gaining ground. Mr. Irvine's address was thoroughly American and democratic. He is an optimist, believing that this country, basically, is good and getting better because the people themselves are sound.

The music for the program yesterday afternoon was given by local talent obtained through the efforts of Mrs. M. H. Horton of Bend.

Before the program of the afternoon was completed it was unanimously voted that the banker-farmer mixer be an annual fall event.
