

COMBS SEES BIGGER YEAR

"I look for one of the best years we have ever had in the automobile business," says Walter Combs, local Buick-Chevrolet dealer. "We find that purchasers are more thoughtful this year. For the most part they are adjusting their purchases to their needs. They realize, too, the cost of upkeep and are selecting the economy cars that meet their needs. This prevailing sentiment, I believe, is accountable for the phenomenal success we have had with the Chevrolet in the last year, and I confidently believe that it will obtain this year."

"We are going to be able to give our Oakland purchaser better service in the near future with the addition of Oakland service in the way of complete line of parts." The Bend Garage expects the arrival of another carload of Chevrolets within the next few days.

Corn Husker Reaps from 25 Acres Per Day

That necessity is the mother of invention has long been an established fact, but it is being proved anew in regard to the agriculturist and the "hired man." Here is the newest, a corn-husking machine which will husk from 24 to 30 acres per day. Farmers find it almost impossible to get efficient help, but the farmer with a grown son or daughter who can operate a gas engine can clean up a big job in just a few days. Or even with limited help, this machine makes possible larger fields in the future.

about February 12, according to Mr. McClure.

MOST FAMOUS OF PALACES

Building Constructed by Brunelleschi for Count Pitti is the Glory of Florence, Italy.

No country is richer in beautiful palaces than Italy. In most instances these have now become the property of the nation, so that the taxpayer is indirectly responsible for the general good while preserving their dignity and safeguarding their treasures. Throughout Italy, from Turin to Palermo, these monuments to the genius of the Middle ages are to be found, but perhaps none is so famous as the Pitti palace at Florence, built upon a hill above the Arno with the beautiful Boboli gardens stretching behind it. Count Pitti, chief magistrate of Florence in the fifteenth century, desiring to out rival Cosimo de' Medici, set himself to build a palace which should be the wonder of Italy. He employed the architect Brunelleschi, whom Cosimo when building his own palace had passed over because of his magnificent disregard for expenditure, and Brunelleschi was given a free hand. Pitti, however, fell into disgrace for plotting against the son of Cosimo and no workman could be found to continue his half-completed palace. Thus for a century it was to remain, until Eleanor of Toledo once more took it in hand and it became—oh, strange irony!—the home of the Medicean grand dukes. The Pitti was not actually finished until 1839. The sight-seer is aware as he wanders through this vast building today, and gazes at its walls lined with five hundred pictures, most of them masterpieces, that he is rather in a royal palace than a picture gallery, and he doubts not the truth of Macchiavelli's verdict, that the Pitti palace "is greater and more splendid than the house of any other private citizen whatsoever."

Maxwell

Among the vast number of motorists that consider reliability and economy the prime requisite of automobiles, the Maxwell is the choice of its price class.

The fact that a Maxwell gives MORE miles on gasoline, oil and tires—and that in doing so it gives stable, dependable service—is the great factor in creating the vast national demand for this car.

More than 100,000 persons who want to make their money go as far as possible will buy Maxwells in 1920. And some 40,000 persons who desire Maxwells will be disappointed because of the shortage.

The output of the eight great Maxwell factories will not—can not—meet the demand. It will probably be impossible for you to get immediate delivery later on. Order early, and you will at least get a definite and early delivery date.
