Covered Them All.
At Leicester, England, there is an inn upon the wall of which years ago a pastor wrote: "I pray for all." The village lawyer, seeing in this a means for free advertising, wrote underneath: "I plead for all." One day a farmer thought he was justified in adding: "I feed all," and an army officer passing through the village left: "I fight for all." But an unknown author added the last line by writing: "I take them all—the devil!" The host, not wishing to show any partiality, has since put his sign: "The House of All Five."

Town Without Streets.
The smallest dependency of France is the De d'Hoedie, situated at the east of Besse Isle. Its population is 238, and the people do not speak French, but Celtic. Fishing is the principal industry, and all the inhabitants are provided with food at an inn managed by women. The town has no streets and the houses are mostly of mud.

Young Mrs. Torkins says that if experience were as good a teacher as advertised, charity would by this time have learned something about which horse to bet on.

Don't "Pan" Your Merchant To the Other Fellow

Talk over your troubles with your own merchant--he's human.

Have you ever thought of it that your local merchant is your employe; that you pay him to perform certain services for you, which if well done you retain him and if he does not you dispense with him and employ another?

Now then—if you were employing laborers who did not serve you satisfactorily, you'd call them in and talk over matters, showing them, from your point of view, wherein they were wrong. And by this procedure, perhaps, you, an employer, might learn that you, yourself, were wrong, in that you had a misunderstanding, were misinformed, or, perhaps, prejudices held by others against you had influenced the laborer. In nine out of every ten cases a conference straightens out matters. Seemingly big difficulties often are, in reality, only trivial matters settled in an instant.

Why not try this on your local merchant? He's your employe. You are the employer. Call on your merchant when things seem to go wrong. Talk over your problems. He's human and reasonable. Don't go about panning your merchant. It's not the way to get down to bedrock.

He has some stiff problems every day. Grant that he may go astray. Your going to him with your troubles will help him to keep his ear closer to the ground; to feel the pulse.

Your merchant is sincerely trying to give you better merchandise—lower prices, or at least the benefit of the best price he can obtain—he's trying to give you service. If he isn't doing these things to your satisfaction—CALL ON HIM AND POINT OUT WHERE HE IS NOT. There's a little 50-50 idea here. Surely you're willing to go with your merchant on the basis of an even break.
