

REPUBLICANS ASSEMBLE TO PICK LEADER

were seated on the main floor of the Coliseum, grouped by states. Banked about them and in the enlarged galleries were the spectators. The speakers' stand was on a huge rostrum built across one end of the hall, another tier of visitors' seats behind it. Committeemen and convention officers sat in reserved spaces on each side of the speakers' stand. Immediately in front was the space allotted to the press. Below the rostrum were the stalls devoted to the work rooms of the newspaper men, committee rooms, medical staff and others whose work could not be accomplished on the main floor.

Headquarters of the organizations of the various candidates and party leaders were located in hotels as close to the Coliseum as possible. Practically all available hotel space was reserved by delegates, convention officials, visitors and newspaper workers soon after the date and place of the convention was announced last spring.

Extra police were assigned to handle the extra crowds and traffic in the vicinity of the convention hall.

Many Women Attend.

One notable feature of the gathering was the sprinkling of the fair sex throughout the delegate ranks, particularly in the section containing the alternates. This signal of the near-arrival of national woman suffrage drew comment from leaders of other days.

Another thing separated the 1920 convention from the past. The hospitable bars which held inviting arms to delegates and sightseers alike were replaced with soft-drink emporiums. No longer was heard, "Let's have another long one before we go in." Probably a few delegates had "something on the hip," or had access to something stronger than near-beer, but the old days and the jammed saloons, with liberal consumption of hard liquor to increase enthusiasm, were gone.

The old Coliseum, which eight brief years ago witnessed the bolt of the Roosevelt hosts and, four years ago, Hughes' nomination, had changed little with the shifting of years. The old G. A. R. button was giving way to the World War insignia; the women were pushing aside the men, but the flags were draped, the bunting flying, the crowds milling as of yore.

Compliment for Uncle Dick.

Uncle Dick, a bachelor, fond of children, was a great favorite with his little nieces and nephews, so when the new baby came and papa told them that the stork had left it at their house, Buddy said thoughtfully: "Too bad the stork didn't know where Uncle Dick lives."

Home Above All.

Home is the chief school of human virtues. Its responsibilities, joys, sorrows, smiles, tears, hopes and cares form the chief interest of human life.—Channing.

GIVES HINTS OF WORK ON BIG PROJECT

rancher in the Redmond section, declared that under present labor conditions he would be willing to hire any sort of labor to save his crop. "Mr. Burt has put us on the potato map," he said, "and the attitude which has been taken means simply that we are standing in our own light. Before the season is over we will be lucky if we can get Japs at $5 a day."

Douglas Mullarky and Max Canning, of Redmond, Lee Davis and Hugh O'Kane, of this city, were among other speakers.

Objections to Japanese labor, if gradually developed, were based chiefly on the fear that introduction of the Nipponese as laborers would lead to colonization. With positive assurances from Mr. Burt that he would aid the settlers in preventing any such occurrence, and that he had no intention of bringing in any more Orientals for his Terrebonne ranch, the delegates from that section expressed their personal desire to cooperate with him. He accepted their invitation to meet with other farmers from the community in Terrebonne.

REDEMPTION OF AMERICA RESTS WITH PARTY

which our government has always rested. The return of the democrats to power with Mr. Wilson or one of his disciples still the master and the leader of a great party, would be a long step in the direction of the autocracy for which Mr. Wilson yearns, and a heavy blow to the continuance of free representative government. The peril inseparable from Mr. Wilson and his system involves the fundamental question of whether the government of the United States shall be a government of laws and not of men, whether it shall be a free representative government or that of a dictatorship resting on a plebiscite carried by repellent methods.

Later in discussing the treaty issue, Lodge declared again the party must stand "against—utterly against"—the policies of President Wilson.

Americanism at Issue.

"We must be now and forever for Americanism, nationalism and against internationalism," he continued. "There is no safety for us if we do otherwise."

The work of redemption accomplished, it is the party's first duty, Lodge said, to reestablish order and respect for law, following that with a vigorous attack on the domestic problems of the day, the first of which in importance, he said, is the high cost of living.

The republican congress has already made a beginning towards handling this and other problems, Lodge said, but has been hampered.

Praises Work of Congress.

"While some of the master minds of the democratic party are chirruping away like little birds that nothing has been done," Lodge said, the republican congress has made in 18 months a record of legislation which he declared would not suffer by comparison with the five-year record of the democrats preceding the war. He listed as among republican legislative achievements, reduction of government estimates more than $1,000,000,000; enactment of the oil leasing and water power bills; passage of a vocational rehabilitation bill for soldiers; bills for disposition of war material; improvement of the federal reserve and farm loan acts; increase in pension of civil war veterans; adoption of a civil service retirement measure; return of the army and navy to a peace footing and increase of the pay of both branches of the service; passage of a budget bill, which was vetoed, the merchant marine bill and the railroad law.

Profiteers Target.

"The rise of prices, the high cost of living, is the most pressing, as it is the most difficult and most essential problem which confronts us," said Lodge. Profiteering is subject now to ample punitive laws. Those laws should be enforced, not in the headlines of the newspapers after the manner of the present attorney general but quietly, thoroughly and efficiently in the courts of the United States. Something more in this direction can be accomplished by the proper regulation of cold storage and a bill for that purpose has passed both houses.

Deflation of currency and credit also would do much to reduce living costs, Lodge added, declaring that "it should be one of the first acts of congress to deal with this essential point."

Production Needed.

The most potent remedy of all, however, is increased production, he said, and although legislation cannot accomplish this directly, and "just how much the government can do is uncertain, it can aid and support, and if anything can be done it must not be omitted or overlooked," Lodge said.

Lodge next took up the Mexican question, hotly criticized the "watchful waiting policy" of the administration, and declared:

"We have watched and waited long enough. It is time that this condition, disgraceful to us and ruinous to Mexico, should cease. We need a firm hand at the helm. Let the Mexicans choose as their president some strong and upright man, friendly to the United States and then let the United States give him real and cordial support and so strengthen and uphold him that he will be able to exterminate the bandits and put an end to the civil war. The Mexican people would not resent the influence or intervention of the United States if it would only help to bring them peace under a president of their own choosing."

Mexican Question Vital.

"The president has been unwilling or unable to do anything for Mexico, but he thinks it our duty to take a mandate for Armenia, which would involve our sending an army there for an indefinite time and the cost would be $275,000,000 for the first year, besides entangling us in all the quarrels and intrigues of Asia-Minor."

From Mexico and Armenia Lodge swung into a discussion of the treaty. He declared, in a lengthy review of the treaty fight that President Wilson has prevented restoration of peace between the United States and Germany. The people of the country, he asserted, are with the republican senators who refused to accept the Wilson treaty and league of nations covenant.

"The American people will never accept that alliance with foreign nations proposed by the president," said Lodge.

"We of the senate have stopped Mr. Wilson's treaty and the issue goes to the people. In 1916 Mr. Wilson won on the cry that he had kept us out of war. He now demands the approval of the American people on the ground that he has kept us out of peace," he declared.

Harmony is Urged.

Lodge urged harmony within the ranks, and banishing of fear that the party dares too much. He reminded the convention of the bold stand in 1896, when the republicans wrote a gold plank into their platform and won. He urged that the party think of the country's future rather than of party future. He also advised against rash promises which he said could not be fulfilled.

He declared emphatically against government ownership of railroads on the ground that in the end it would mean not only that the government should own the railroads, but that those who run the railroads shall own the government. The rights of the general public would disappear under this scheme and nothing would be left the people but the duty of paying taxes to support the roads. "Our government must not be dominated by any one man or any class or any selected body of men who represent a part of the people and not the whole."

Lodge scored government administration of the railroads as wasteful and extravagant and praised the railroad law under which the lines were returned.

LAWN AND GARDEN SPRINKLING RULES.

Residences on the odd numbered side of the street will sprinkle only on the odd numbered days of the month.

Residences on the even numbered side of the street will sprinkle only on the even numbered days of the month.

To avoid impairing the water service in case of fire, the above rules are now covered by a city ordinance. The state board of fire underwriters required this as one of the considerations for reducing the fire insurance in the city.
