"We know nowadays that even a universal education . . . supplies only the basis for a healthy republican state. Next to education there must come abundant, prompt, and truthful information of what is going on in the state, and frank and free discussion of the issues of the times." H. G. Wells, "The Outline of History."

"THE CARELESS WOODSMAN"

Forest Protection week is over, but its lessons are still to be remembered. The following poem by Edgar E. Guest, "columnist" of the Detroit Free Press, may help some to remember. It is called "The Careless Woodsman":

He loves the woods, he has said to me,
 He loves the scent of an old pine tree,
 And the cooling depths of a forest glade;
 He loves the woods, but I'm most afraid
 That when he is with them his conduct shows
 He is really one of their ancient foes,
 For I saw him once, and I can't forget
 The thing he did with a cigarette.

I can't forget that he dropped a match
 Still flickering flame in a leafy patch
 And walked away from the curling spire
 Of smoke with never a thought of fire.

He loves the woods, but he lacks the stamp
 Of a woodsman true, for when he breaks camp
 If you should follow his trail you'd find
 He'd left a smoldering fire behind.

Oh, build your fires when you cook your trout,
 But stand you there till you've put them out;
 Smoke your pipes and your cigarettes,
 But watch for the woodsman who forgets
 That a tiny spark from a careless hand
 Will grow to a blaze that will sweep the land.

No friend are you to the woods I say,
 If fire still glows when you walk away.

INNKEEPERS PICK TRAVELLER CLEAN

American Dollars in Great Demand — Experienced Burglar Might Have Chance To Avoid Tipping.

By Clyde A. Beals.
 (Written for the United Press.)
 LONDON, June 23.—The open season for traveling in Europe is on and the average Americans who come over will be shot as full of holes as a decoy duck. Every hotel keeper is bent on squeezing the lemon dry for himself, and, on receiving a complaint against the most unreasonable extortion, smiles obsequiously and murmurs the new European slogan, "But YOU have dollars."
 The only real good the exchange does Americans, as a matter of fact, is to make them feel richer. In Central Europe, Germany and Italy the prices are still relatively low. In

A Decade
 Ten years ago the world was fat, and basking amply in its grease; we laughed until we sprained a slat when seers foretold the end of peace. And Wilhelm changed his uniforms, was photographed twelve times a day, and courtiers, in idle swarms, admired the war lord on his way. The weary poet scratched his head to think up topics for his rhymes, and then the foolish books we read had faked-up wars in Zenda climes. The voters bought their hand-me-downs, and knew the dyes would never fade, and women wore their ample gowns, and kept their ankles in the shade. The railway barons walked in state, like princes of the royal blood, and now the row they raise is great, and they confess their name is Mudd. Ten years ago I hired Jim Jones, and paid him thirty cents an hour; and now each day he draws six bones, and such a stipend makes him sour. And Russia's czar, ten years ago, still wore his crown upon his brow; somewhere beneath the northern snow his battered bones are lying now. The world is not the same old place, its teeth are loose, it's lost its hair, it has been shaken to its base, and nothing's right side up with care. And I bewail the dear dead days, that shall return no more, alas! when we all went our routine ways, and cut the old accustomed grass.

Belgium the level of food prices begins to approach the American, and in France, and, strangely enough, Holland, one pays dollar for dollar, and sometimes a little more. In all these countries one may find relatively cheap hotels and restaurants, but they are both well off the beaten tourist tracks, and dirty. The line between the good and bad places is rather sharp.

No American need fear the food shortage, even in Austria. There it is still practically impossible to get white bread, though this in the surrounding countries is readily available.

It is discouraging to try to travel for pleasure, however, in any of the countries except those along the Atlantic and North sea. The train services, owing to the coal shortage, have been so curtailed that the cars are hopelessly overcrowded.

The hotels are continually filled. One must reserve rooms from one to 10 days ahead. And the complete traveler must be equipped with a full assortment of bug and itch ointments. The bugs have become so brazen that they don't wait to begin operations even until the lights are out.

In Italy, also, the hotels, as well as restaurants, have evolved what amounts to a double tipping system.

Placards announce that no tips will be accepted, and that instead a service charge of from 10 to 15 per cent will be made. But, to get out without tipping takes an accomplished burglar.

Put it in The Bulletin.

AGED WANDERER WILL CONTINUE LONG HIKE
 Just as soon as Charles Gilbert, aged wanderer, who was picked up last week, has fully recuperated from his long journey from the Grants Pass poor farm, he will be turned loose by the Deschutes county authorities, following an interchange of letters with the officials at Grants Pass. According to information received, Gilbert habitually spends the spring and summer tramping over the country and may be depended on to return when autumn starts. He is 77 years old.

Coat and Dignity Both Go.
 The diners at the correctly formal restaurant were surprised to see the dignified man, who might have been a Supreme court Judge, hurry over to his table without a dinner coat to cover his dress shirt and vest. In back of him the waiter, who had just helped him off with his things, was horrified and speechless.
