

SWIMMERS MUST BE PROPERLY ATTIRED

One Piece Bathing Suits Sufficient For Boys, Says Officer—Warns Against Swimming In Weeds.

"Boys swimming inside the city limits must be properly attired," said Officer Tom Carlton this morning, thus bringing the much discussed question of bathing dress closer home. One piece suits will be sufficient for the boys, he indicated. A warning in regard to swimming among the weeds which fill the Deschutes river near the city park was issued by the same officer. "Those weeds are dangerous to any but expert swimmers," Carlton stated. "Parents should warn their children against taking chances in the water."

Nation Still Richest
"Though we may be passing through a crisis, this is still the richest nation in the world. The people are not very badly off. Even the men you see in the cities looking for jobs look prosperous. The trouble is mostly psychological."

"Crops from coast to coast are looking better than they ever have in my experience," said Smith, who returned in May from attending the National Editorial convention. He has just come from Idaho, where he was interested in the campaign to increase dairying.

Railroad Aids Farmers
Sunflowers are becoming a very satisfactory crop in Wallawa county as well as here, he remarked. Not as much trouble has been experienced in learning when to harvest and how to cure sunflowers as was had with corn.

"I wish farmers would realize that I am working for their interests because the company I represent profits with their prosperity," he stated.

"We recently sold 4000 sacks of potatoes in Idaho when the market was apparently drugged, and the last three carloads brought the highest price."

CARPENTIER, BROKEN, NO LONGER IN ROLE OF "MAN OF DESTINY"

(By Henry L. Farrell.)
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, July 21.—Georges Carpentier probably fought his last great fight against Jack Dempsey. There is every reason to believe that the Frenchman is through.

Much of his spirit is gone and his right hand, his only hope in the ring, is cracked.

Led to believe through the adulation of his countrymen and through his own experience in the ring that he was a "man of destiny," Carpentier learned that he isn't. He found out he is not the greatest and it hurt him.

Already the Frenchman has given signs of a broken spirit. The picture of him "before and after" at Manhasset is a strange contrast. Happy, care free and content, he smiled and was jovial all through his training. Defeated, he turned rather sullen and morose.

His attitude was striking apparent at a banquet given in his honor recently by the Editor & Publisher. All the visiting British and French writers were there and prominent newspapermen from New York. All during the evening Carpentier sat at the head of the table. He looked off into the distance like a caged lion staring into old realms where he was once supreme. He seemed totally oblivious to his surroundings, except when one of the speakers would make a remark about him. Then he would seem to jump out of his reverie and smile wanly as if thinking: What is it all about or what does it amount to now?

In looks, in actions and in his attitude, he was a defeated man, a man who made no attempt to conceal the feelings that he had failed in his greatest ambition and that he didn't care any more.

We know from one of his French newspaper friends that he feels just that way. He told his friend that he was ashamed to go back to France, that he would like to delay his return as long as possible. He feared not what his countrymen would say, because they are still loyal, but he fears the look in their eyes, the attitude they can't hide that he had disappointed them in one of France's greatest hours.

That broken spirit will have just as important a bearing on his future in the ring as his fractured hand. He will hesitate to put all his strength behind bones, which once cracked, will crack again. Fighters know what a bad hand means just as well as physicians and Carpentier knows, too.

A wise handler of boxers, who has been in the game for thirty years, remarked recently that it was not strange that Harry Greb, Tommy Gibbons, Bill Brennan and even Johnny Wilson, the middleweight champion, are after a bout with Georges.

"The next good one that goes into the ring with him is going to get him. He's through now. He will never be the same again. Frenchmen are more romantic, more temperamental than Americans. He'll never forget Dempsey," he said.

LONDON STORY WILL BE SHOWN ON SCREEN HERE

"The Little Fool," a Metro release of a C. E. Shurtleff Production, adapted from Jack London's "The Little Lady of the Big House," is coming at the Liberty Theatre on Friday and Saturday.

"The Little Fool" portrays the drama of "Dick" Forrest, a wealthy rancher, and his wife, Paula. Paula falls in love with the husband's chum, and is about to leave the palatial mansion forever. At the last moment, Paula Forrest does not really know her mind.

Cat Helps "Trotzky" Register Surprise

Trotzky, the belligerent dog actor, so named because of his chronic objection to everything that exists, has performed his most artistic bit of acting in Metro's all-star production of "The Little Fool," adapted from Jack London's story "The Little Lady of the Big House," showing at the Liberty Theater Friday and Saturday.

In this picture, the scenario calls for action on the part of the dog that at first was believed impossible. The animal was scheduled to pause suddenly in his ramblings before the camera, raise his head and stare in open-mouthed wonder. And, much to the surprise of everybody the dog performed the feat just as Director Philip Rosen had ordered!

The secret is held by a life long enemy of Trotzky's—a cat. A property man, who possessed a keen imagination, sought the cat and held it in readiness for the psychological moment. When the director called for the expected pause and look of surprise on the part of Trotzky, the property man suddenly lifted the cat and held it as if ready for attack. The result was ideal.

The picture was scenarized by Edward Lowe, Jr. Allan Siegler did the photography. The cast includes Ora Carew, Milton Sills, Nigel Barrie, Helen Howard, Marjorie Prevost, Iva Forrester and Byron Munson.

CADMEAN CHAUTAUQUA

WARDEN J. D. BOTKIN

What is the chief cause of crime? Are the movie thrillers responsible? Or the War? Or a breaking down in religion? Or more people in cities, or what? How should a convicted criminal serve his term? Are pardons wise? When should paroles be granted? Do the prisons reform men or confirm them in crime? Are our courts and executives too lenient? Is the public too forgetful? Does the fear of capital punishment keep men from crimes? What per cent of prisoners are women? How can crime be prevented?

All the above and many other questions will be answered by the Honorable J. D. Botkin from his experience gained as warden of the Kansas State Penitentiary. Authorities differ as to the causes and cures for the recent crime wave, but it is a fact that crime has been increasing. It's a duty of every patriotic citizen to know something of it. Mr. Botkin is a national authority and a pleasing speaker.
