FAMOUS DOG CAST FOR BIG ROLE IN FILM PLAY

A dog which cannot understand English and answers to the French language only, was used in making important sequences in "Flower of the North," the Vitagraph special production based on the famous novel by James Oliver Curwood, which will be shown at the Liberty theater tonight.

For that reason Henry B. Walthall and Pauline Starke and other members of the company brushed up on their linguistic abilities, and commenced to speak French while on location. In fact, through the greater part of the time French was the language used by the entire company.

The dog, a beautiful Belgian shepherd, was secured from a United States aviator, while in France. It looks and cleveness this dog is all that the most exacting director could wish for. But the animal could not understand a word of English, and when it was necessary for one of the members of the play to speak to it, her owners told the non-French speaking party how to pronounce the phrase, and presto, Marie, her great eyes beaming with intelligence, jumped and hurried to the response.

The dog was secured in Souge, France, when she was three years old. She is three-quarters Anatian shepherd and one-fourth Wolf. She is owned by a Los Angeles business man.
