THEY DRILLED TOO FAR; WELL IS DRY

Fable of Goose and Golden Egg Works Out—But Promoters Win In The End.

(By United Press to The Bend Bulletin.)

PONCA CITY, Okla., Aug. 2.—An oil spattered derrick stands like a lonely sentinel on the Murray farm in the Tonkawa oil field, near here.

Perhaps it contemplates on the fate of the goose that laid the golden egg. The fabled goose and the Murray well have something in common.

Drilled to a depth of 2100 feet, this well came in with a flow off 500 barrels a day.

But the promoters were not satisfied. If Murray produced 500 at 2100 feet, what would it produce at 2600 feet? They shut off the flow and drilled deeper.

In the deepening process the drillers lost their tools, which crashed a half mile down to the bottom of the hole.

A heart breaking fishing job developed. The tools were never recovered. That is why Murray stands aloof and abandoned today in the heart of the busy Tonkawa field.

But the men behind Murray were stubborn.

They drilled a twin well, Southwestern No. 8. Instead of stopping at the 2100 foot level, they doggedly went on through to the "unlucky 2600." Southwestern No. 8 is now producing 1300 barrels every 24 hours.

That's the oil game.

FINISH HARVESTING OF FIRST HAY CROP

MOVIES

MOUNTED POLICE SEEN IN RALPH CONNOR FILM

The commissioner of the Royal Mounted situated at Fort MacLeod, Alberta, Canada, who is seen leading the stirring rescue fight and roundup of the Indians in Ralph Connor's vivid picture of mountain and plain, "Cameron of the Royal Mounted," which comes to the Grand theater Thursday and Friday, has been in this branch of the service since the days of the Louis Riel rebellion. During these trying times he and a small body of scattered riders held in check the threatened uprising of the Blackfeet, the Cree and the Stony Indians, who abounded between the international border and extended as far north as Peace river crossing on the upper Athabasca.

Special saxophone and organ numbers will be given at the Liberty tonight.

Anthony Trollope.

His great, his inestimable merit was a complete appreciation of the usual Trollope, therefore, with his eyes comfortably fixed on the familiar, the actual, was far from having invented a new category; his distinction is that in resting just there his vision took in so much of the field. And then he felt all daily and immediate things as well as saw them; felt them in a simple, direct, salubrious way, with their sadness, their gladness, their charm, their comradery, all their obvious and measurable meanings.—Henry James.

Listening to Aurora.

A northern traveler says that Labrador presents unusual facilities for the observation of the aurora borealis. This person says he sometimes heard the aurora borealis when it was making a rapid movement and the sound was that of a faint, crisp rustling.

We had tire trouble on our way to the theater, but called 257-J for the Yellow Car. That's some speed bug; it was there and had our tire half changed when we got back to our car after phoning. We never even missed the comedy. 221c
