

COUNTY JUDGES TRY NEW MOVE

Signatures Secured By Falsehood, Claim

Information Sent Out to Induce Withdrawal By Bus Referendum Signers

The State Association of County Judges and Commissioners of Oregon has inaugurated a vigorous effort to prevent the referendum being applied to the bill passed by the last legislature which regulates for-hire trucks and bus companies operating throughout the state. This association is sending out all over the state thousands of letters to signers of the referendum petitions, asking that they request the secretary of state to remove their names from the petition when filed in his office.

It has been found by the association's investigators that circulars of these petitions misrepresented the nature of the bill in securing signatures telling the people in many instances that the bill, if it went into effect, would drive the busses and trucks off the highways; that if the law were killed by the referendum, it would restore the five cent street car fare in Portland by permitting the inauguration of a jitney service in that city; that it would reduce the bus fares and freight truck rates and other fairy stories of like nature. In many instances, so the investigators reported to the association, circulars of the referendum petitions represented that the referendum petition they had was against the so called cigarette bill, thereby securing a large number of signatures through this misrepresentation.

Ask Withdrawal
Information of the association is that the truck and bus operators also enough signatures to refer the bill. The ruling of the attorney general is that a few more than 5,000 are sufficient. The letters the association is sending out to persons whose names appear on the petitions ask if they understand the proposed measure and also carry a digest of what the bill means. These letters request that if anyone signed did so under misrepresentation or through misunderstanding, that the secretary of state cancel the person's name on the petition. A postal card addressed to the secretary of state is being enclosed with the letters. The association is also preparing to attack the authority of the governor to veto the special bill passed by the last legislature. It will be recalled that the legislature, anticipating that several of its bills might be referred by the people, passed a law authorizing a special election in November, that these referendums might be voted on. The governor vetoed this bill. The association proposed this to contest by proper legal method the right of the governor to veto the bill.

California Glee Club to Come Here

"As good as anything in vaudeville," is one of the comments heard most often concerning the 14 act vaudeville program to be given by the University of California Glee club in Bend June 1 and 2.

The same type of show that has tickled audiences in Shanghai, made them roar in Scotland, guffaw in Manila and split their sides in Hongkong on foreign tours of the club, is expected to make a tremendous hit here, to say the least. A judicious mixture of club singing, comic skits, instrumental solos and jazz band playing gives the program of the Berkeley club a universal and irresistible appeal.

Quality rather than more size has been the aim of C. R. "Brick" Morse, director of the Glee club. For this reason only 20 out of a club of 75 and out of a university of 10,000 are selected to make this summer's trip. The group appearing here next month is nearly the same as the one which made itself famous on a tour through Europe and the United States last summer.

The California Glee club is on an extended tour of the Pacific northwest which will take it into southern Alaska. This will be the first time any college glee club has reached Alaska, just another reason why these boys are known as the "World Famous California Glee Club."

MOVIES

THIS MOVIE STAR A FAN AS WELL AS AN ACTOR

As relaxation after a day of many hours in the studio and on the movie lot, Jack Pickford, youthful screen star and producer, plays baseball with his associates at the Pickford-Fairbanks studio where he made "The Hill Billy," his latest feature film, coming the last three days of this week to the Grand theater.

He is an ardent baseball fan, and fond of every angle of the game. He also spends much time in the Douglas Fairbanks gymnasium, keeping fit for work before the camera. "The Hill Billy" is a story of the Kentucky mountains and the people of that region. The story is Jack's own and was written by him, with the aid of Mary Pickford, his celebrated sister. George Hill was the director, and Lucille Rickson, 16 year old film actress, has the leading feminine characterization because of her peculiar fitness for the part.

Elk Lake Open Early, Big Catches Are Made

Elk lake will be open to automobiles by Friday, according to information sent to Bend Sunday evening from the lake by Allan Wilcoxon, in charge of the concessions. As the result of the work Saturday evening by members of the Bend fire department, cars Sunday were able to reach a point about 900 yards from the lake, it is reported. The firemen, working late Saturday night, used dynamite in opening up some of the snow drifts. A large number of anglers reach Elk lake Sunday. Excellent catches were reported.

There's a Reason!

The coming of the long anticipated railroad construction is already bearing fruit. The announcement of the Stewart-Hartshorn shade roller plant is just an indication of the effect this much needed transportation will have in Bend. Other industries will follow and all this means a rapid growth in population, a great building activity.

er as she said it. "You—you can't imagine what she's been to me. She's the most wonderful woman I ever knew."

George laughed. "But—she's just—the girl passed for an adequate word, then added, "perfect."

A little cynical expression appeared again, making the man look older and tired again.

"What a thing it is to be young enough and inexperienced enough to believe still in perfection!" he said. "I don't know whether I envy you the youth that point of view implies, or feel sorry for you because of the bitterness and disillusionment still ahead of you."

"I've had the bitterness and disillusionment," Pan said, suddenly able to talk freely to this man.

"You!"

Then, just as suddenly, her old shyness came back and the self confidence she had gained fled away from her.

"A man or a woman?" George asked.

"Oh, a man." She had to answer. "I never met a woman I could like at all, until I met Gloria. She's been everything wonderful, she couldn't be disillusioning."

George smiled again. "You still have faith. That proves how young you are. It's only been half a disillusionment."

"I've glanced at him shyly. He was lounging back in the big chair, his legs straight out in front of him, feet crossed. One hand was thrust in his pocket, one had the inevitable cigarette that he so rarely puffed at, loosely held between his fingers of his finely modelled hand. He was staring into the fire, not looking at Pan at all.

The girl thought suddenly how tired he was! His eyes had lines at the corners, there were lines at each side of his mouth. She wanted at once to feed him eggs and cream and make him take afternoon naps and long country walks. She lost forever her shyness of him when she gained a pity for him.

What had been his disillusionment and disappointment? Gloria? Gloria was married she knew.

"You are in love with Gloria," she thought out loud.

Monday—A Concert.

THE TIRED MAN

Chapter 46

Several things happened before Pandora had lived in the city long. She found herself possessed of what was to her a wardrobe of undreamt of luxury. She found herself the mistress of Gloria's household. She was in charge of Francis, and the new cook, a huge negro who could get up the most delicious meals, whose intentions of keeping the place clean were always good, but whose inborn laziness was too much for the best of intentions.

"She sees a room as a perfectly round place," Pandora said once with humorous exasperation. "There are no corners in her world. And she takes a nap every day after luncheon."

This brought a laugh from Gloria. "Never mind, her muffins are dreams of delight and her roast chicken something to die for," she said. "We take what we can get these days and give thanks. Pan, do you know my young friend, George, has taken a great fancy to you?"

"Has he?" Pan asked in surprise. "Has he?" mimicked Gloria. "Is that so strange?"

"Yes," Pan answered. "For if he does, he's the third person who has."

"And at Gloria's incredulous smile, she went on:

"My father, who is as fettle as I, and you, who are so very kind and sympathetic."

She did not mention Morton, who was always in her mind, the memory of whom still hurt sorely.

But she treasured this new liking. And when George Ridgeway came in one afternoon a few days later, her eyes lit up with the greatest joy at seeing him.

"But Gloria isn't here, she's not coming home until late, she said. She's going from her office to dinner and then to the theater."

"Then you'll ask me to have tea with you, won't you?" George said and settled himself down into his favorite cushioned chair.

"That's how their friendship began. "How long are you staying?" he asked once.

"As long as Gloria wants me," Pan answered. "But I'm not much use now. Frankie is better and she has a cook. I suppose I'll go back to the farm in the spring."

The queer depressed feeling came over her again at the idea. The farm—and Gladys—and the baby who,
