

FARMERS LOSS FOLLOWS COLD

Millions Damage Caused In Middle West

Lack of Moisture In Many Sections Adds to Harm From Cold Weather

(U. P. Leased Wire to The Bend Bulletin)
 CHICAGO, May 26. — Farmers throughout the middle west have lost millions of dollars due to frost damage to growing crops during the unprecedented cold snap of the last three days, crop experts estimated today.

Both fruits and grains were heavily hit by frost, reports from all sections show. Conservative estimates of the wheat and corn damage were placed at 25 to 30 per cent. Fruit crops were even more seriously injured.

In several sections of the rich corn belt, entire replanting will be necessary, it was reported to brokers. This will bring late maturity, with danger of autumn frosts.

Killing frosts were reported in wide sections of Nebraska, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Illinois, Indiana, Oklahoma, Minnesota and the Dakotas. Ohio and Kentucky also suffered some from frost damage, but the losses will be less acute in these states.

Freeport and Dixon, Ill., reported lowest temperatures when the mercury dropped to 26 degrees. Sub-freezing temperatures were registered at many other points.

Ice Reported
 Loda, Ill., reported ice formation one-quarter inch thick.

Adding to the damage by frost, the general crop situation in the middle west is aggravated by lack of moisture in many sections, a crop expert pointed out.

Oats, hardest of the leading grains, are believed to have escaped serious damage.

In response to increasing reports of crop damage, grain prices advanced on the Chicago board of trade and other grain exchanges. Extremely light yields in both wheat and corn are now anticipated.

The climax of the cold snap has been passed, the weather bureau here reported today. Slightly warmer weather is expected. Reports of light frosts during the night were received from several points.

Real Comedians, These

Comedians who are really comical has always been the boast of the University of California Glee club, and Chris Quayle and Joe Kelly do not allow this to be an idle boast. These boys have worked up an act that has earned for them the headline place on the glee club show. Their act consists of unusually clever patter, songs and dances.

Quayle and Kelly have been working together for a long time and have acquired a finish seldom found in any but the leading vaudeville artists. Their interpretation of "Haltosis Blues" is indeed unique and never fails to bring down the house. Their dances deserve special mention inasmuch as they have been originated by themselves.

Quayle and Kelly will appear with the California Glee club in Bend June 1 and 2.

A CONCERT

Chapter 47

"Have you found that out already?" George asked and smiled at her. "We're all in love with Gloria."

Pan took her hand from her mouth, where it had flown the instant she realized her thoughts had been expressed aloud.

Of course! She knew George was in love with her friend. Who could help it?

She felt awfully sorry for him. He must be unhappy about it.

George meantime did not seem particularly unhappy. He seemed rather amused.

"You're a naive child," he said finally. "Do you like music?"

"No," Pan answered. "That is, I never heard any. I like dance records on phonographs well enough, because they don't try to be anything but tunes in a special sort of time, but I don't care for the classical things."

Then she added: "I ought to. Aunt Maude says I haven't any musical sense, because I didn't like the way our piano teacher played at her concert."

"I'm sure I shouldn't either," George answered, and Pan felt suddenly justified in her dislike of Miss Ehridge's hurry-scurry rendering of various "classical" selections.

"There's a nice concert tonight," George went on. "Better come with me. We'll have a bite of dinner first in a quiet little restaurant I know of."

Not for worlds would he have missed the chance of taking this young girl to her first concert! George had lived in a world of women who had read and traveled, flirted, intrigued and tasted most of the experience of life—until most of them had lost their capacity to enjoy living. At least they had been educated beyond the enjoyment of simple pleasures.

He was rewarded beyond his greatest hopes.

He would have been sufficiently rewarded by the joy that lit up Pan's dark eyes, and the flush that came into her pale skin. Think of being asked to dinner in a real restaurant with a fascinating man! It was the first time this had happened to her.

George wisely took her to a tiny French restaurant where they served a simple table d'hote meal and where Madame knew most of her customers. It was, of course, quite grand to the child new to the city.

The big concert hall awoke her. She listened, entranced, to the well modulated buzz that rose from a couple of thousand throats.

"Isn't it pretty?" she whispered. "It sounds like the hum of bees in the sun."

George smiled. The buzz of talk before a concert always annoyed him. Suddenly, however, he found the gigantic humming—not pretty, but at least bearable.

New York that winter had the best music in the world, and this was one of the most famous orchestras with a conductor of international reputation.

JOHN GATES FOUND HIS DOG

The dog is valuable, with a pedigree anybody would be proud of. A week ago he went on an exploring trip. Today a man living at quite a distance returned him to Gates. He saw the classified ad in The Bulletin.

Everybody Reads the Classified

There's usually one and only one reason for any newspaper's leadership in classified advertising. That reason is superiority as a newspaper. A newspaper gets most classified advertising because it pays the classified advertiser best. It pays best because it is the best newspaper—that's the real test. In Bend, The Bulletin carries nearly all the classified ads that are published. Classified ad rates are 1c per word for each time run, with a minimum charge of 25c per ad. They must be paid for in advance.

thing for a first taste," he thought. "I wonder how she'll take it?"

Then when the symphony started he forgot his comrade, and lost himself as he always did in the soaring, sweeping melody of the symphony.

There was a symphony, an intermission, then a shorter piece and a dramatic close with Scriabin's overpowering "Poeme de l'Extase"—truly ecstasy in music, ecstasy so great as to be almost unbearable. As the music rushed to its crescendo, with strings, brasses, woodwinds and drums and over all the echoing notes of the organ, George became conscious of the girl's hands gripping the arms of her seat so tightly that the bones stood up from the flesh.

He turned over so slightly. Pan was staring ahead with flushed face and wide eyes, her chest rising and falling with her quick, agitated breathing. When the last note echoed away, or rather melted into the thunderous applause, Pan was crying.

"You poor child," George said and laughed a little. "I shouldn't have started you off on something so emotional. Come along, I'll take you home and tell Gloria to put you to bed."

Pan wiped her eyes and protested and apologized. She felt she had utterly disgraced herself.

"I'm sorry," she kept repeating. "Don't be sorry for being youthful and emotional," George said. "Be glad you can feel things so."

Pan didn't understand. The concert had given her a violent headache, she couldn't understand that either, because she loved it. Gloria was in when they returned, and she gladly went to bed and left them talking in the living room.

"A strange little creature," George remarked. "A bundle of nerves and fears, starved for self expression, starved for beauty and knowledge."

"You'll do her good, Gloria, you're the sort of stimulating mental tonic she needs. I'm not sure whether she'll do you good though, she'll be a responsibility."
