PAN LIVES

Now and again you may hear it said by some latter day materialist that Pan is dead. The wretch who killed Santa Claus and who denies the existence of fairies will prove you by the book that not only is Pan dead but that he never lived and skipped about in the meadows. In this age of the machine and the efficiency curve and the nothing-but-business outlook on things there is no room for Pan. He does not belong in the picture.

And yet he lives. We know it for we saw him the other day. True, he had lost his goat legs and hairy coat, there was no trail of nymphs attendant on him, he was not dancing in the field to the tune of his own making, nor blowing on his familiar pipes. Yet it was Pan just the same.
He did not dance at all but instead lay back in a Ford coupe and played, not on a syrinx, but on a fiddle. He had come from Idaho and had stopped by a stream while his companion fished. And while he waited he played.

Had it been a little darker perhaps he would have left his car, resumed the old familiar shape and gone to sing down in the field by the river. But times have changed. People would not have understood. They would have seen only a sort of down-at-the-heels, middle aged man making a fool of himself. They would have sent for the sheriff and the county physician. These would come, there would be an inquiry and then off to Pendleton with him. No, he was taking no chances. He sat in the car and he played his fiddle.

But it was out-of-doors, there was a forest nearby, a stream below, flowers and green grass everywhere and he made music for himself. That is how we know it was Pan.

BARGAINS

I took a handsome roll of kale and visited the bargain sale at Rinkum's doodad store; handbills announced in strident tones, that things which sold for seven bones could now be bought for four. It was a carnival of trade, and graybeards, matron, youth and maid blew in the shining plunks, they purchased lids and silken socks, and liver pads and eight-day clocks, and Saratoga trunks. It's difficult, I wot and wist, this sort of frenzy to resist, and so I joined the gang; I purchased things till late at night, I blew my kopecks left and right, and felt no twinge or pang. I thought that I was very wise; "the prudent man," I muttered, "buys when things are cheap as dirt"; and so I flushed my roll of bills, and bought a churn, two sausage mills, a gun, a buckskin shirt. Because I found them passing cheap I bought a couch on which to sleep, an icebox and a mat, I bought some pictures framed in oak, some boxing gloves, a ton of coke, a choice Angora cat. I thought, when I was homeward bound, that I had shown a judgment sound, in buying things while cheap; but morning brought me feeling punk when I surveyed the pile of junk, and watched the women weep. "There's nothing here," my folks decreed, "for which we have the slightest need, it's rubbish, first and last; oh, pile it up 'twixt barn and byre, and set the measly stuff afire, while neighbors stand aghast."

Quartet Big Attraction

One of the feature numbers on the program to be given by the University of California glee club, is a group of songs by the Golden Bear quartet. This group, composed of John Smale, Kenneth Courtwright, W. K. Morrison and Bill Cowan, boasts of one of the most complete and varied repertoires of songs ever presented by a quartet. The enthusiasm with which these boys render their plantation, humorous and classical songs, never fails to win them a big place in the hearts of all those who hear them. Their act is just one of many features to be given by the world famous California glee club at the Capitol theater here on June 1 and 2.

"Material Evidence"

The success of any health system rests in the results that system accomplishes. The Science of Chiropractic, a drugless system, has only its results in restoring the sick to health to account for its phenomenal growth. Today it is a tried and proven Science, established with more than 20,000 practitioners, and secure in its future with millions of followers—patients suffering with every conceivable kind of disease. RESULTS count. Results represent the very best of material evidence of the worth of anything. Chiropractic is founded upon the idea that health is a matter of the proper adjustment of the human spine; that disease is the result of nerve impingement cutting off the free transmission of functional energy supplied by the brain to the organs involved. Chiropractic is known by its RESULTS. The competent Chiropractor is known by his patients. All of which is "material evidence."
