Remember how thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them.
Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man.—Ecc.
12:1, 13.

THE SCHOOL LAW DECISION

Without more of the text of the court's opinion than is yet available it is too soon to make any extended remarks on the subject of the late Oregon compulsory school law and the supreme court's opinion that it is unconstitutional. It is to be noted at this time, however, that the decision against the law was unanimous and that it followed in a comparatively short time after the argument.
It did not take the court long to make up its mind and, contrary to the fact in many important cases, there was no division of opinion. That indicates just about how thoroughly bad, from the constitutional viewpoint, the law was.

Justice McReynolds wrote the opinion.
It was he who wrote the opinion in the German language case over a year ago, setting forth that it was not within the power of a state to forbid the teaching of German in the public schools. What he said in that opinion seemed clearly to foreshadow this decision in the Oregon case. In the earlier case he was, as it were, preparing himself for this latest decision.

During the campaign for the law we argued here that it was unnecessary because it had yet to be shown that private and parochial schools had produced graduates of un-American tendencies. We gather that the court made a point of this fact, declaring that no need of the law had been shown. The chief ground of the decision seems to have been, however, that the state has not any such supreme control over a child as the law contemplated. The parent comes first. The state may say what the child must study, but it cannot say who shall teach it or where. At a later time the state, or the nation, may take a grown child and put him in the army. Before that time he is controlled by his parents and by no one else.

Many have supposed that the law was initiated by the Ku Klux Klan.
It happened by a coincidence that the measure was initiated just at the time when the Klan tide was running highest in Oregon. To a certain extent the Klan tried to make the measure its own and it undoubtedly contributed largely to its passage. The idea originated, however, not with the Klan but with another order. Its purposes were of the highest, but they were clearly misguided and founded on a false conception of the spirit and laws of America.

Now the business is over. Let's forget about it and about the ill will it caused and go forward in a new spirit of tolerance and understanding and true Americanism.

"I work," said Job Kersimpkins Twine, "I work, but donnerwetter! I do not like this job of mine—I'm built for something better. You see me here at dinky jobs, at brew-ings and at bakings, and I've an intellect that throbs for mighty undertakings. One day you see me sawing wood, the next I'm hoeing pumpkins, and at such tasks I don't make good—they're only fit for bumpkins. I try out all the jobs in sight, my spirit nothing daunting, but, none of them appears just right, there's always something wanting.
Men say I am not worth two bits, I'm lazy and unwilling; but when I find the job that fits, you'll see me make a killing." He teetered round from chore to chore, and when his years were 50, he journeyed to the poorhouse door, in raiment far from nifty. Whatever job he had to do he viewed with scorn and loathing; he wished to join the lordly few who work in tailored clothing; he would be captain of the hosts, a man of lofty station, so digging holes for cedar posts stirred up his indignation. He'd supervise a diamond mine, or gild a set of lilies, but packing swill to shrieking swine gave him the well known willies. "Act well your part," the poet writes, and if your part be humble, still act it well, oh, weary wights, and do not beef or grumble. We all admire the gent who sings while doing jobs unpleasant, and if he's built for better things those things will find him present. But fortune doesn't often choose the man who hates his calling when her rewards she grandly strews—she doesn't like his bawling.

Women's Clubs Strike At Activities of Reds

WEST HADEN, Ind., June 2.—A blow at revolutionary activities of "red" agitators in the United States was struck today at the 18th biennial council meeting of the General Federation of Women's Clubs. The executive board approved a resolution for presentation at the council meeting pledging support of the federation in combatting the "peril." The resolution declared there is "a well organized and far reaching plan to overthrow the government of the United States and set up a communist soviet system over here."

Recommendation for the establishment of a national junior department to aid in counteracting the communist activities was made.

Five thousand academics and high schools have been invited to send athletes to the national interscholastic track and field meet to be conducted by the University of Chicago during the first week of June.

BIG ELKS RALLY AND SMOKER

COME AND HEAR ABOUT THE PLANS FOR THE NATIONAL CONVENTION.

100,000 ELKS from all over the United States will attend the Convention in Portland July 13th to 18th. Many thousands of them will come by automobile and will tour the Coast States after the Convention. The hunting, fishing and scenery of Central Oregon will attract many of them if we advertise our section at the Convention.

The Bend Lodge has arranged for General Headquarters for CENTRAL OREGON ELKS at the IMPERIAL HOTEL.

The Bend Lodge has arranged for one of the big windows of the Meier & Frank Store for the Convention Period. This will be used to exhibit the resources of Central Oregon.

The Bend Lodge is arranging for a vacant city block in which the Central Oregon Elks can park their cars during the Convention. A watchman will be kept on the job to check cars in and out.

The Bend Lodge is arranging to furnish a uniform for its members to use in the Grand Parade.

The Bend Lodge is arranging for a 20-piece Band. The Band will wear the uniform of the Bend Lodge.

Whether or not you are an Elk you will be interested in this Convention because we are going to advertise Bend and Central Oregon to the world.

Let's put it over big.
