Filed on by the pioneer Grover Gerking as a desert claim many years ago, there is a 200 acre farm just northwest of the town of Tumalo that is rapidly winning recognition in the development of a new and ever growing industry of the Deschutes country. This farm is that of Jones & Summer. The industry is dairying.

In the early days of Central Oregon development it was learned that conditions in the mid state country are ideal for the cultivation of hay. The first plan of farmers was to raise hay for market. In later years, when the price of hay at times slumped as low as $6 and $7 a ton, it was decided that if any profit was to be made, hay must be used on the farm, not sold.

One of the first men in the county to realize that the conversion of hay into milk and butterfat was a paying proposition was C. N. Jones, a native of West Virginia, who bought the old Gerking place in 1919. Jones came to Central Oregon with the intention of starting a dairy farm. In 1920 he was joined by E. C. Summers, also a native of West Virginia. Jones came here from Douglas county.

If a visitor to the Jones & Summers dairy farm doubts the royal lineage of the beautiful animals which graze on the irrigated pasture land, he has but to glance over a few pedigrees. In this manner he will learn that in Central Oregon there are dairy animals equal to any in western America. Juanita's Lady, one of the Jones & Summers cows, was sired by the Jersey isle animal Goldenmaid's Prince. This sire sold for $15,000.

Cows Highly Valued

Another of the many highly valued cows in the Jones & Summers herd is Beauty's Fancy Dora, only a few years ago acclaimed by judges at the state fair to be the best dairy animal in Oregon. This animal won the $325 prize awarded by the Southern Pacific Company. The dairymen have refused $1,000 for one of their purebreds, Cassnaranda's Pogis Beauty, sired by Oregon's Pogis Oenida.

Jones was found by a representative of The Bulletin near the center of his 140 acre tract of alfalfa, irrigating. As he continued his work of irrigating, before crossing the field to the pasture where the purebred animals grazed, he told of his first visit to Central Oregon, coming to the Madras country.

The Jones & Summers dairy herd, at present numbering 24 milk cows, will eventually be expanded to 50 animals, Jones mentioned as he took his interviewer from animal to animal in the pasture. If none of the animals now on the farm die in the next year, the purebred herd will contain 32 animals in the spring of 1926. Out of the 12 purebred calves now on the farm, nine are heifers. The herd sire is Holger's Leonidas, a three year old in August. The grandsire on this animal's sire's side was Poga's Ninetynine, king of sires.

Country Ideal

In the opinion of Jones, an experienced dairyman, Central Oregon is ideal for the development of the dairying industry on a large scale. He believes that the Deschutes country is more suitable for a dairy center than the noted dairy counties of Coos, Tillamook, Clatsop and others. Oregon, Jones mentioned, has more dairy records than the rest of the world combined.

The advice of the dairymen to beginners is to start with purebred animals, looking forward not only to the maximum production of milk and butterfat, but also to the possession of a herd which will produce other valuable animals that can be sold for a good price. In the opinion of Jones, it is better to start with one purebred than with a half dozen grade cows.

Although primarily dairymen, Jones and Summers do not put all their eggs in one basket. Last fall they purchased 500 feeder lambs, placing them on the market as soon as they were in proper shape. This year, providing crops are good, they will buy 1,000 head of lambs. The wives of the two dairymen are the owners of flocks of white Leghorn chickens numbering about 300. These chickens produce enough eggs to cover all living expenses. "My wife even buys my chewing tobacco," Jones humorously remarked. The revenue from the dairy herd goes toward the upkeep of the farm.

To Test Animals

No creamery is operated in connection with the Jones & Summers farm. The produce from the cows is sold as milk. The Jones & Summers delivery wagon each morning carries to Bend some 200 quarts of milk for distribution to regular customers. More orders are being received than can be filled, and for this reason the two dairymen plan to increase their herd to the farm capacity just as soon as possible.

In the near future, the two Tumalo dairymen plan to keep an official test of the production of their dairy animals, and it is their belief that they can equal, or probably better, some of the state records. One cow of the Jones & Summers herd, Fancy's Beauty Violet, last year produced 14,000 pounds of milk, or about 900 pounds of butterfat.

After learning of the royal lineage of the Jerseys, a visitor to the Jones & Summers farm feels somewhat awed as he touches animals whose sires and dams were the nobles of the dairy world. But although their mothers and sires were queens and kings of Jersey animals, the sleek cows do not appear to take their dignity very seriously. This is especially true of the heifers, which are inclined playfully to prod a visitor with their curved horns.

The highest incorporated yacht club in the world is the Grand Lake Yacht club of Colorado. In August of each year the club holds a regatta on Grand lake, 8,360 feet above sea level, for a cup donated by Sir Thomas Lipton. The regatta is conducted under the same rules which govern the most widely known yacht clubs in America.

NOTICE!

The Deschutes County Fair Board begs to announce that it has again designated the Bend Bulletin as publishers of the Deschutes County Fair Annual Edition. The Bulletin is therefore accorded the authority from the Board to publish the only Official Edition for 1925.

In this matter the Bulletin will have the full cooperation and assistance of the Deschutes County Fair Board, their committees and appointees.

This action is taken for this year because of the high character of the Edition prepared by the Bulletin last year for the Board, the 1924 Edition undoubtedly contributing heavily toward the success of the Deschutes County Fair last Fall.
