LEGISLATIVE INTENT

Discussing the question of the remission of penalty and interest on certain unpaid taxes and our recent editorial on the subject the Press says: "The supreme court in considering this case will undoubtedly take into consideration the intent of the legislature when they passed this measure."

That sounds eminently reasonable. How will this intent be discovered? By an inspection of the statute and a study of its words, of course.

What does the statute say? It says in part: "The county courts MAY and are hereby AUTHORIZED to remit all interest, penalties and costs which have been or may be incurred on all taxes levied in their respective counties on the tax rolls for the years 1921, 1922 and 1923," etc.

What is your guess as to the intent of the legislature that used these words?

When the legislature said "may" did it mean "shall"? When the legislature said "authorized" did it mean "directed"?

The intent of the legislature sticks out all over the section quoted and it is not the intent given the law by the forced construction of the attorney general.

The Press says that the county court is bound by the opinion of the attorney general. This is absolutely not so. Consider this. The other day a circuit judge said that a Portland zoning ordinance was unconstitutional. Is the Portland city council accepting the decision? It is not. It is proceeding to act under the provisions of the zoning law and will continue, so it is stated, until the supreme court says the circuit judge is right. The county court is even less bound by what the attorney general has said than the Portland council by what the circuit judge decided.

We take issue with the Press also in respect to whether the recent action of the Deschutes court should be allowed to stand now that the matter is to be tried out in the supreme court. Since an answer is to be given by the court, the proper course, we believe, is for the county court to hold matters unaltered until the decision is given.

If the Press is returning to this discussion will it not set forth specifically what it conceives to be the "erroneous premises" upon which our argument of June 8 was based.

Yesterday we spoke of the condition of the Century drive between the city limits and a point beyond Big Spring. Another important summer road that needs attention is the one leading from the hill above the fish hatchery out to Broken Top. The accumulated dead fall of several years now lies across this road and in places it is badly rutted. The road is an important one. Over it one may drive to the plateau of Broken Top, one of the most attractive spots in the country. From it a branch road will take one to Three Creeks lake or it forms part of a circle trip by way of that lake, Sisters and the McKenney-Bend highway. A connecting road over to the Century drive is planned by the forest service and now partly built. We repeat that the road is important for its value to tourists and to all of us locally. It should be put in shape for summer use.

YOUR HEALTH

By FREDERICK STRICKLER, M. D., Collaborating Epidemiologist, Oregon State Board of Health

MAKING WATER PURE

The beautiful, clear, bubbling spring or the stagnant pool—which is apt to be the more dangerous? Contrary to what we usually think, it is the former. Many a "healthy, good tasting" spring water, which was highly esteemed in the neighborhood, and which was even bottled for shipment, has been found to be contaminated and a prolific spreader of intestinal diseases, such as typhoid fever and dysentery. The stagnant pool, on the other hand, though it may contain plant life which might give us a slight upset, is not likely to be the vehicle of the

THE SUNNY SMILE

A sunny smile is useful throughout our passing years; it's better than a cruise full of bitter, brackish tears; it says to us, "Be jolly, let no misfortune daunt"; it says to melancholy, "Arount, and eke avant!" It's good to keep on throwing the smile that does not wilt, until your teeth are showing their caverns plugged with gilt. A smile is much more helpful than any style of frown, than any protest yelpful that sends our spirits down. But now and then a fellow who springs, throughout the year, a smile serene and mellow, gets notions rather queer. He smiles, in princely splendor, and then the idea gets it should be legal tender, and liquidate his debts. We toil, when he is running for justice of the peace, for votes we all go gunning, our efforts do not cease. He smiles upon us grandly, he smiles on every gent, he smiles so sweetly, blandly, he fills us with content. But if we ask a favor his course is often rude, his observations savor of rank ingratitude. And if we're haled before him for speeding with our trucks, our explanations bore him, he fines us twenty bucks. A smile is quickly faded, its splendor one forgets, if it is hawked or traded in payment of old debts. The man who thinks his smiling will settle all he owes is foolish, he is piling up cords of future woes. We have to buy our raiment, our rainsticks and our tiles, and we need better payment than bright sunny smiles.

the reason that during the weeks that the water remains stagnant, disease germs starve to death. Most disease germs cannot live long outside the body, being adapted to only a parasitic life. In fact, one method of purifying city waters is by "impounding," or storing the water in large reservoirs, for several weeks, so that germs such as those of dysentery and typhoid die off.

These germs live in human bodies, and are cast off through the excretions. Where these come into contact with water or food taken into the body, they have an excellent chance of gaining a foothold and producing another case of disease. They are more apt to get into springs and shallow wells than any other water supply by seeping from a deposit of waste through a crack in the soil, or by being washed in by heavy rains. There is no such thing as a spring which, once infected with typhoid germs, retains this infection indefinitely. But often there is a continual pollution of a spring from a constant supply of the germs such as an insanitary outhouse.

To test water, we examine it to see whether those germs are present which are always found in human waste. If they are, the source is polluted. Though it may not at the moment contain germs producing disease, it may at any time do so, and is therefore a potential disease spreader.

City water supplies have means of procuring pure water, or of making it pure. Smaller supplies often use the chlorine method, which is perfectly safe, relatively cheap and does not require expensive installations. Either a minute quantity of the gas is used directly, or small amounts of bleaching powder are added; the latter recalling the "chlorine bags" used by the army during the war (which incidentally prevented a lot of sickness).

When camping, it is best not to take any chances on the purity of our water supplies. Unless we are absolutely sure that the water has been thoroughly tested, and is under competent supervision, it is best to boil all of it that goes into our mouths. Bringing water to a boil kills all the harmful bacteria that are apt to be in it. It also makes water taste "flat"; but this can be remedied by shaking or stirring it energetically after it has cooled.

Each year many persons, living in cities where typhoid has been practically wiped out, return from their vacations with a case which they picked up through carelessness and lack of proper precautions.

ENGLAND'S AID HELD IN DOUBT

Germany Sceptical As to Four Power Pact

Only Very Limited Protection of Frontier Foreseen Under Agreement

BERLIN, June 11.—The German (U. P. Leased Wire to The Bend Bulletin) foreign office thinks any popular impression in America that the proposed four power security pact means England would politically or militarily protect Germany is childlike.

The United Press learned today that Wilhelmstrasse is thoroughly skeptical on this phase of the pact, despite London advice that the pact—as far as the British are concerned—would work both ways and could mean in certain circumstances that England would come to Germany's aid.

It was said here that the pact foresees only very limited protection for Germany's western frontiers and then only under complicated legal stipulations which would mean little or nothing to Germany.

It has been explained from London that if Germany comes into the league of nations she would then have to submit, in certain circumstances, to passage of troops across her territory. But the same advice claimed that the pact itself did not grant France the unrestricted right to march across Germany if she saw fit.

WASHINGTON, June 11.—The United States government will not become responsible in any way for a European security pact, a high state department official said today in denying that this government has been approached by either Germany or the allies to act as repository for the proposed pact.

No such request is expected here since the European governments concerned fully understand this government's position, the high official added.

Vacationland Booklet Tells Mountains' Lure

The Central Oregon country as a paradise for vacationists comes in for several paragraphs of mention in an illustrated booklet, "The Pacific Northwest and Alaska," recently issued by the Union Pacific System.

"The Cascade range, as viewed from the eastern side, is very different from the outlook at Portland," it is mentioned in the booklet. "From about Madras, Redmond, Prineville and Bend it accentuates one's love of the mountains. And this eastern section—a land of wide spaces, big and little ranches, irrigated areas, volcanic flows, timbered slopes—is one of keen interest aside from the scenic attractions of the Cascades.

"From Bend, the metropolis of Central Oregon, a road road extends through the timbered stretches along the eastern side of the mountain range to Crater Lake national park and Klamath Falls, near the Oregon-California line—also to the charmingly picturesque mountain lakes of Paulina, Davis, Waldo, Odell, Crescent and Diamond, ideal camping resorts on the very ridge of the Cascade mountains and famous for trout fishing."

Another beautifully illustrated booklet issued by the Southern Pacific Company this season is one describing Zion national park, Bryce canyon and the Kaibab forest. This booklet contains 43 pages, with maps and colored illustrations.
