Winning An Enemy.—If thine enemy be hungry, give him bread to eat; and if he be thirsty, give him water to drink. Proverbs 25:21.

UTILIZING SKYLINES

Not so long ago there was some editorial mention about the ownership of that majestic skyline which forms the western horizon of Central Oregon. We conceded that the skyline was big enough for all and that ownership was a relative thing—it was Bend's skyline in Bend and Redmond's skyline in Redmond.

Now that the ownership is definitely settled and we refer to the serrated western horizon in news articles as the "mid state" skyline, we are wondering if we should allow the matter to rest at that—probably never mentioning it again until some cataclysm of nature, such as that which ruined the hypothesized Mount Multnomah, so disturbs the Alpine scenery that doubt as to the ownership of the shattered peaks again arises.

After giving the matter serious consideration, and noting that other claimants of the snow mantled mountains are evidently content to know that the skyline is theirs as well as Bend's, in a very timid manner, like a junior partner making a suggestion to a gruff senior member of the firm, we make a plea that the skyline be used for something other than a mere horizon.

Movie producers are said to take their troupes to far places to secure suitable settings. Why go two or three states distant from California for locale when extensive snowfields can be found in Central Oregon in July and August? Why go to British Columbia when snow cliffs 40 feet high can be filmed in the mid state Cascades? Why seek the scenery of the Canadian Rockies when here in Central Oregon can be located accessible glaciers, such as those on picturesque Broken Top and the Three Sisters? Why search for icebergs when such a place as the McKenzie pass lava beds—"the devil's finger box"—can be reached over a modern highway?

Rippling Rhymes LONG LIFE

The span of life increases, the learned physicians cry; and voters and their nieces are not so apt to die; for science, health's defender, has made old ills surrender, some triumph, in its splendor, each morning greets the eye. The future generation will live two hundred years, as from the happy nations the microbe disappears; fair science daily seizes a bunch of dread diseases, from them the life she squeezes, and lays them on their biers. She says, in language weighty, strange things will soon be seen, when sprightly lads of eighty will gambol on the green, and girls of ninety summers will vamp the village plumbers—such prophecies are hummers, and will come true, I ween. But there's the Book that teaches this lesson to all men, that one is through who reaches his three score years and ten; he may hang on a little, and sit around and whittle, with achy bones and brittle, but he's a relic then. This long established limit will doubtless always hold, though does may try to trim it, or stretch it manifold; we'll live the term accorded, with noble aims or sordid, and then we'll be rewarded with sleep as good as gold. Why should we wish to tarry when rest is what we need? Why should we ask to carry our burdens till we bleed? To see old things paraded when all their bloom is faded, and we are stale and jaded, from all illusions free?
