This Looks Like a LIVE TOWN

How does our town impress the man who swings off a train at the depot and takes his first glance up the street?

There are two kinds of first impressions on towns. One seems to say "What a burg! I'll never do any business in this place!" And the other pipes right up with, "Well, this looks like a live business town. Ought to be a good place to live, too!"

The difference in first impressions is often created by street lighting. The town that nods in the gloom of a few old lamp posts seldom attracts any big industrial enterprise or sees any boom in population. But the town that welcomes you with bright, wide awake streets, ornamented with up-to-date and good looking lighting equipment, attracts outside interests and keeps everyone within the town more contented and prosperous.
