

Impending Collapse Of New York Nationals Forecast

REAL CONTEST IS DEVELOPING

Pirates and Reds Dangerous Now

(U. P. Leased Wire to The Bend Bulletin)
 NEW YORK, June 17.—Impending collapse of the New York Giants is making a contest out of the National league pennant race and is furnishing one of the big features of the maturing baseball season.

Leaving home for an invasion of the west, the Giants had a lead of seven games and they looked like a clutch for the championship. They stumbled and are on their way home now with their lead whittled to two and a half games, their bench filled with injured players and their pitching staff shot.

Meanwhile, the Pittsburgh Pirates and the Cincinnati Reds shot into high speed. The Pirates have closed in on the Giants by winning nine out of their last 12 games and the Reds have shoved the Brooklyn Robins out of third place by winning 11 of their last 12 games.

The American League still looks like a battle between the Philadelphia Athletics and the champion Washington Senators. The two clubs still are separated by a half game. Some of the critics are predicting the Athletics to advance, but they still are playing the aggressive, fiery game that got them away to such a good start.

Walter Johnson, the old noble, has been the main stay of the Senators.
