Deliverance at hand—I will be with him in trouble; I will deliver him. Psalm 91:15.

WHAT $600,000 WOULD BUY

Some day, we suppose, the people of Bend will go to the polls to say whether they should mortgage their future and the future of the city to the tune of $600,000 to buy a water system that can just as well be left unbought, and to build a pipe line that might just as well be left unbuilt.

We believe that the bond issue will not be voted. It is being proposed by the council, but not championed by the council; it is proposed because the people in a straw vote last summer instructed that the issue be laid squarely before them for a definite vote. But apparent reasons which existed a year ago have been eliminated; even the leader in demanding municipal ownership and a pipe line from the Tumalo has taken a complete flop and realizes that there is now no reason for piling up so enormous a burden of debt on the people.

Too, voting to submit an issue for a vote, and voting on spending $600,000 are two entirely different things. We believe that the voters of Bend have altogether too much common sense to consider seriously a 22 year debt of $600,000.

Consider what $600,000 would buy: Three school buildings of the size and specifications of Bend's new union school, or

Pay the running expenses of the city of Bend for the next seven years, or

Build a library that would be a credit to the city, a courthouse, and a city hall, or Pave 20 miles of city streets, or Do lots of things. It's positively fascinating to sit and think what you could do with $600,000 if you had it. But you wouldn't spend it all at once—not if you were in your right mind.

Here's what $600,000 will not buy: The Bend Water, Light & Power Co. distribution system and a pipe line from Tumalo creek.

The company's price is already $5,000 in excess of the amount allowed in the Dubuis and Koon report, and it is a price as of last October. How much more would be added to compensate for the additions and improvements of the intervening months? Also engineer's construction estimates are quite frequently low, and if low in regard to the purchase price of the distribution system are even more likely to be low as to pipe line.

No, $600,000 is not enough. It will not finance this water program. And at the same time it's altogether too much.

Consider the cost, voters.

Whatever may be our demerits we claim recognition for one fact at least—so far this summer we have not once asked anyone how he liked the heat or whether it was hot enough for him. Likewise we have never asserted that it was pretty hot. To achieve this record we have had to exercise unusual self-restraint and, D. V., we shall continue to do so.

Boy, page the learned scientist who prophesied some 12 months ago that this would be the year without any summer.

(U. P. Leased Wire to The Bend Bulletin) NAVAL AIR STATION, Lakehurst, N. J., July 17.—After being out all night and most of the morning in severe storms which delayed its return from the Virginia capes, the United States navy dirigible Shenandoah returned to its station here today, landed and was housed in its hangar shortly before noon.

Rippling Rhymes by Walt Mason

RICHARD ROE

Oh! I had heard of Richard Roe, and when I crossed the vale, I said, "I'll spend an hour or so with Richard in the jail. I'll try to find the reason why he's oft behind the bars, while out of doors his neighbors fly in shining motor cars." I found this Richard in his cell, all free from griefs and fears, and he was fat and looking well, and shed no idle tears. He had no feeling of disgrace, and he remarked to me, "The hoosegow is a pleasant place, I care not to be free. In summer this old jail is cool, while toilers out of doors leave sweat behind them in a pool, as they pursue their chores. In winter this old jail is warm and cozy as can be, and there's no howling arctic storm can get its hooks in me. They bring me food three times a day, good, honest, smoking hash, and for this grub I do not pay in labor or in cash. What more can any man desire than I receive in jail? Why should I labor and perspire for paltry rolls of kale?" "There's such a thing as self respect," I muttered, through my veil; "it's born in men, but soon is wrecked by sojourn in a jail. I hoped to find you in a mood to harken to my rede, but since you take that attitude, I'll not advise or plead. Far better shiver in the snow, or shrivel in the heat, than bask in comfort, Richard Roe, with prison grub to eat."

WORD FROM GLORIA

Chapter 56

"But Gloria will be back!" Pan said. Frankie presented no problem to her.

"Not for weeks—I saw them in Paris, before I came over." "Oh, tell me—you never said a word!" she reproached him. "Were they happy? Was Gloria happy? Do you like Santley now he's back?"

"I've always liked him. I used to know him very well, in the old days," George said. "I always knew he was in love with Gloria. We were both with her, trying to keep up her courage, in the dreadful time when she was making up her mind to break loose and go to New York. He was glad then that my home was America, so I could keep an eye on her. He was ready to quit over here and go back, but she wouldn't have it."

"I know." "I was her guardian, in his eyes. When you used to see me annoyed with her it was because of the senseless way she wasted her time on no-account people and her strength and nerve force on foolish parties. When she would get keyed up and neurotic—"

"You would glare at her, I've seen you," interrupted Pan. "I was glad of you for a time, because I saw that you would be a quiet force with Gloria, sort of a sedative to keep her down when you were together. Later I was glad that Gloria could be of use to you—when I began to fall in love with you."

"When was that?" asked the girl, deserting one topic for another more fascinating.

"I don't know—sometimes I think from the time I first saw you huddle behind a gorgeous sofa cushion, because you were ashamed of your shabby frock; sometimes I think only from the night you brought me a hot supper and insisted on my eating it."

Pan laughed, then demanded, "Now, go on about Gloria."

"Gloria? Oh yes—well one night while I was at work I had a phone call from Santley, asking me to dine with them. We spent the whole evening talking—and most of the night, there was a lot to say. Happy? I should say she was!"

"Quieter?" "Yes, steadier that is, not so apt to fly off the handle as she used to be."

"I can't imagine Gloria really quiet," Pan said thoughtfully. "I didn't say she was quiet—there was plenty of vivacity, but not the neurotic sort, plenty of gaiety, but not the forced kind. Wait and you'll see. They were going to the south and Italy. I told them they'd melt, but they didn't seem to mind. Gloria says that she's going to all the places where she was unhappy before, just to see what they're really like, now she can see them as they are."

"Laying ghosts," Pan said, thinking of some of the long talks between George and her friend.

"Laying ghosts! But it will take another month at least, there are many of them to lay. That's why I said Frankie was a problem."

"But—we won't be married before she—before they come back?" "A month! Are you going to make me wait a month?"

Pan laughed a little at that. "I hadn't thought—that is all so new to me. I'll marry you whenever you say. But it seems so odd—"

"She broke off and looked at him. "What seems odd, sweetheart?" "The idea of marrying you. I'd really be your wife, wouldn't I?"

"I hope so—unless you think an English clergyman can't do it up properly. In that case we'll have to embark soon for home—"

"No, I didn't mean that. It's just the idea of being your wife—" the idea of being your wife—"

Sudden tears were near the surface again.

"Don't you see? It's so much happiness, so much more than I deserve, so much more than I ever thought would come to me!" Her eyelids trembled a little, it seemed for a moment as though the tears would come, they had been near the surface all evening.

"I loved you so much, I knew I would be perfectly happy if you were. I would have been, if you had married Gloria—it wouldn't have been as you think, my mind telling me I should be happy, while my heart wanted you—"

"My happiness is with you," he said, with an arm around her. "Then I'm doubly happy. I'll grow used to it—and be selfish about it too, in time. Happiness makes one selfish," she said with a wisdom odd in 22.

Her dark eyes were shining and the little face that was even too slender most of the time, was vividly alight with her joy. George thought her most beautiful—as she was when she was well and happy, she had an elfin quality of face and figure that was more than mere beauty.

"We'll be married this week," he said suddenly. "Will you have to bother about trousseaus and things? Get it after you're married—I shan't tell Gloria until she comes back here. But what shall we do with Frankie?"

"Take him along," answered Pan.

Chapter 57

George had said they would be married that week, and Pan had only one objection.

It makes the time we are engaged so short," she said. "And after all, isn't that supposed to be one of the nicest parts of getting married?"

"Probably," George agreed. "I never was engaged, so I don't know. I don't want to hurry you, of course."

In spite of his gentleness, there was a little wistful note in his voice that touched the girl.

"It isn't a matter of being hurried," she said. "There aren't any great preparations to make. It isn't" as though we were having a grand wedding, is it? I'm not even buying a trousseau. To George, being a man, a trousseau was quite an unimportant part of a wedding. He had often wondered why all his friends spent hectic weeks with dressmakers and made tiring rounds of shops buying new clothes—more than they wanted always—when it was assumed that normally they had at least a sufficiency. He decided once it was because they liked long newspaper descriptions of their dresses, and magazine pictures showing the gowns posed on models, with artistic high lights thrown on lace and carefully thought out shadows to bring out the richness of texture.
