A new commandment:—Jesus said: A new commandment I give unto you. That ye love one another: as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples. JOHN 13:34-35.

THE ELECTION—AND AFTER

By a vote hardly sufficient to be called overwhelming but yet ample large enough for the purpose the people have endorsed the $600,000 water bond issue. Bend is now committed to ownership of the local water system and to Tumalo creek as a source of supply.

As to the change from last year's water election when nearly twice as many more, out of a total only slightly larger, favored these changes. That, however, is neither here nor there. The voting is over and the result is known.

Everything that is water under the bridge. The future, how this business is going to work out, how soon the desired changes can be made—these are now the important questions.

To hazard a guess as to how soon all changes will be complete would be idle. One can, however, list the major things to be done before the will of the people is carried into effect.

In the first place some settlement must be made with the bond houses that have the contract for these bonds. Unless they are willing to accept the city's annulment of the contract they will either get the bonds now or sue for damages.

Another thing that should be done immediately—and undoubtedly will be—is the opening of negotiations with the company to set the price on the water system. Possibly the company will say that it has already named its price. A price has been named, as is well known. If that is its rock bottom figure and if the city thinks it too high, condemnation will be a long drawn out business.

Settlement of the question whether anything must be paid the Tumalo district for taking water from the creek must come. That, also, is likely to be a long drawn out affair and the sooner it is started the better.

And finally there is the building of the pipe line up the Tumalo. That might be started this fall. It can hardly be finished before next summer. And, of course, there would be no point in finishing before the city had taken over the company's system.

There will be lots of other things—the appointment of a water board, a decision whether wood pipe or steel shall be used, acquisition of rights of way and of a reservoir site, the creation of an organization, and many others, but the big ones are the four mentioned above.

They will take a lot of work.

THE OLD OPTIMIST

How popular the ancient gent who views the modern doings without a sign of discontent, and with no vain beshrewings! He is no man to cry, "Alas!" no prophet of dejection; the merchant princes, as they pass, regard him with affection; the children gather round his knees to hear the old man twitter, the housewives list, while shelling peas, to this sunshiny critter. Too many men, when they grow old, are filled with indignation; they shake their hoary heads and scold the rising generation. All things are going to the dogs, true worth is disappearing, the poor old world is slipping cogs, and stripping all its gearing. The boys are headed for the dump, where modern customs send them, and any delegate's a chump who stands up to defend them. The girls are vain, the dotard rants, they let cheap things ensnare them; they're so unlike their sainted aunts it's folly to compare them. All virtue died some years ago, all merit drooped and withered; so often has this tale of woe by sad old men been blithered! So when a man of wintry years gives modern things approval, we greet his blithe remarks with cheers, and weep at his removal. If you are old and if you catch yourself thus sourly yipping, 'twere best to seek the booby hatch—your mental works are slipping.

Building Rock Here Attracts U. of W. Dean

Roberts when discussing the purposes of his trip into the Central Oregon country. There is a tendency in the east to use stone of varying color for building purposes, with dark colored rocks for the foundation and stones lighter in color for the upper parts of structures, said the dean of the Washington college of mines. In the vicinity of Bend there are a variety of stones suitable for building purposes, he pointed out.

Diatomite Mines Visited Central Oregon has in the diatomite mines at Lower Bridge a great asset, it is the opinion of Dean Roberts, who visited the mines yesterday, accompanied by Bemis. When discussing the diatomaceous deposits, Dean Roberts briefly reviewed the probable geologic history of the Lower Bridge formation—valleys blocked by molten lava, the formation of great lakes the depositing of the microscopic protective covering of the diatoms, the eruption of volcanoes and consequent showers of ashes and stones. Although it has its many uses, the Lower Bridge diatomite is too soft for building material, Dean Roberts mentioned.

When Dean Roberts was discussing the rocks of the Central Oregon country which are suitable for home and office buildings, he referred to the durable pink stone that was used in the construction of the local railroad station, the Presbyterian church and other structures in Bend. Another desirable material is that used in the construction of the fireplace in the Pilot House Inn. Dean Roberts pointed out that the black basalt so common in Bend is most desirable for foundations.

Wants Light Stone The kind of building material desired by eastern capitalists is one which is light in weight, as well as durable. The "pink stone" of the Bend country approaches such a material, Dean Roberts remarked, although he did not say that it would be given serious consideration until all deposits on the Pacific coast had been inspected. To be available to builders, stone suitable for construction purposes must be located near a railroad, the visiting dean said.

From Bend, Dean Roberts and Bemis planned to leave today for the Indian mountain and Newberry crater, where the pumice deposits will be examined. From this point they will go south to California by the way of Crater lake.

Dean Roberts was in the Deschutes country on one previous occasion, in 1904, when he made a trip through the mid state country on a pack trail.

not have occurred if the proper precautions had been taken.

During the same year, $28 infants died. Many of them could have been saved if their mothers had had a better understanding of their care, especially during sickness. Education of mothers and mothers to be would save many lives—both their own and their children's. For this reason, the bureau of child hygiene of the Oregon state board of health has prepared a series of letters to prospective mothers, which are sent monthly before the baby comes, and for four months thereafter.

These letters take up, in a simple way, the things a mother should know and should do to prepare for her baby's coming. They advise her of the precautions she should take at various times, and what danger signals to look for. They tell her how to go about conserving her health, and that of her unborn child. The second series of letters gives her pointers on taking care of the new baby, in the same way.

Many expressions of appreciation have been received from women who received these letters and from their doctors. It does not seem to be generally known, however, that the letters are available. Physicians who have patients whom they would like the series sent to, should send the patient's name to the Bureau of Child Hygiene, State Board of Health, Portland. Prospective mothers who would like the letters should send a request to the same office.

A selection of the best pamphlets and literature available on various subjects connected with the letters is sent out with the latter. There is no cost whatever connected with this service.

TWENTY FUNERAL SUNDAY

Funeral services will be held here at 2 o'clock Sunday afternoon from the Lutheran church for Terkel Tweet, brother of Thomas Tweet of this city, who died at his home in Liberty, Washington, early in the week.

changed so much in the past 50 years as have the towns of Kansas, Missouri, Colorado, Montana and Wyoming, as motion picture directors have discovered to their cost when endeavoring to recreate for the films some vanished center. The sleepy freighting posts of the old west are today bustling cities.

For the production of Zane Grey's "The Thundering Herd," which William K. Howard directed for Paramount, an exact replica of an old time trading post was built. Pioneers declared it was correct in every detail, according to their memories of old towns such as Fort Worth Village, Dodge City and Salt Lake City.

In the photoplay, the town is just starting to boom, as great numbers of hunters rush to the buffalo fields. Half a dozen buildings have sprung up about the post. These buildings are occupied by saloons and dance halls. The picture realistically portrays the adventures of two of the many caravans that started for the far west. An exciting Indian battle and Both Walker, the present titleholder, and his English challenger dropped heavy training. Wells must win by a knockout to get the title.

YOUR HEALTH

By FREDERICK STICKER, M. D. Collaborating Epidemiologist, Oregon State Board of Health

WHAT ABOUT MOTHERS?

It has been said that to become a mother is more dangerous than to be a soldier in a front line trench. While this is something of an exaggeration (particularly in states like Oregon where the people live under good conditions) it does remind us that motherhood is a much more dangerous undertaking than it has any right to be. In 1924, in Oregon 108 mothers lost their lives in giving birth to children. It is certain that a large proportion of these deaths was unnecessary, and would
