THE "SKINNER" PASSES

"You can get all the young fellows you want these days to drive a truck, but a 'skinner' is hard to find." So complained a road builder to us the other day and we found in his words something of an epitome of the progress of the automobile and the effect it is having on another phase of life.

You can see the picture. In a way it is allied with that other entitled "From the farm to the city," which is showing today all over the country. Many of the jobs that the young man finds open when he makes the move have to do with the gas motor, and his horse lore passes. The good roads that the automobile brings are harder of realization because the horses that are essential for some of the construction work have no one to drive them.

He was a picturesque chap—the skinner. He knew his stuff. He handled the reins and the team with loving care, combined with a wide open profanity flowing from a dust filled mouth. His successor, the truck driver, is also a dust eater, but his job is mechanical and he cannot work up his feelings as much for—or against—a machine as for an animal, particularly if that animal be a horse.

The commissioner of food and drugs in Maryland will investigate to discover whether a man risks his life by kissing rouged and powdered sweeties. He will do the job by testing cosmetics, but surely a better way would be by tasting them after the modern laboratory methods.

The Oregonian glorifies the sunset seen through the smoke pall, likening it to a Corot painting. Maybe the effect is marvelous but the cost is pretty high.

This time Cinderella did not get the slipper. She got the boot.

Jim Ginger wrote some splendid odes, embalming this and that, and strangers traveled all the roads to place wreaths on his hat; but in the neighboring abodes green envy came to bat. "There's something wrong," the baker said, "our culture's all awry, when men hang garlands on the head of such a tin horn guy; how does an ode compare with bread, a sonnet with a pie?"

Fifteen Years Ago

(From the columns of The Bend Bulletin of the issue of August 10, 1910.)

President Lovett of the Harriman system was here this week with a company of other Harriman officials. One of the prettiest boats on the new pond above the B. W. L. & P. Co. dam is that built by Charles Stanburrough and owned by him and H. E. Allen.

R. B. Gould has returned from Crescent, where he has been locating a dam site for a proposed power plant. He found the best site a mile below the Crescent townsite on Little river.

A heavy dynamite explosion at the rear of The Bulletin office Monday was found not to be the work of the Black Hand, but was due to a rubbish fire igniting four sticks of dynamite which had been left by some workmen. No serious damage was done by the explosion.

MAFALDA

By John Goodwin

CHAPTER VI

In Name Only

Jill sat huddled in the arm chair by the fire, staring blankly at the old piano and trying to straighten things out in her mind.

She scarcely knew how she had got home to Fisher's alley, or how long she had been there. In the tangle of events one thing was clear to her: she understood why she had been discharged, in so generous a manner, from the Gallions office.

Jill, however, gave very little thought now to Mr. Heatheredge or Tatham Brough. She did not allow her mind to dwell on him; he seemed nothing more than a figure in a nightmare, from which she had suddenly awakened. There remained only the memory of a bitter and in-avoidable insult; but it was not with her own troubles that Jill was concerned. She was thinking of Mafalda.

She ought never to have left Mafalda. That moment of weakness, a weakness of which Jill had not believed herself capable, when the shock of the discovery overwhelmed her, might lead not only to trouble, but to tragedy. But the whole affair was beyond her grasp; she could make nothing of it. Where was Maffie now? What was happening to her?

Jill rose to her feet, determined to go in search of her at once. And just then a key rattled in the lock, the door swung open, and Mafalda entered.

Jill gave a cry of relief. For a moment the two girls looked at each other, then Mafalda closed the door and strode into the room.

She was looking defiant, almost triumphant. There was a flush of high color on her cheeks, a gleam of excitement in her eyes, and in her attitude there was a trace of the pose, almost unconscious, of the actress.

"So here you are!" she said. "Don't look at me like that. You ought to be down on your knees in gratitude to me, Jill. Do you know what I've done for you? Do you know what I've saved you from?"

"Maffie!" said Jill piteously, "the whole thing is beyond me! I can't believe it, I think I must be dreaming. Tell me—"

"No!" said Mafalda curtly. "You tell me first how you came to be there with that man—what was it that he asked of you? You'll get my story when I've heard yours."

"Why I have only known him for two weeks," said Jill, and haltingly told her sister of her meetings with Mr. Heatheredge, and how the acquaintance had started. Then Jill paused, and, glancing at Mafalda, felt an instinct of discretion and omitted all mention of the encounter in the Gallions office. She passed on to the last meeting, and with burning cheeks gave a very halting account of what had passed between her and Tatham.

Mafalda listened, breathing hard. "He asked you to marry him?"

"Yes."

"I was in time, then, Jill! What did you say?" She came nearer and laid a hand on her sister's shoulder.

"Did you want him—a man like that? You don't mean that you cared about him?"

"I thought I did—once," said Jill. "I knew better, when he said the things to me he did."

Mafalda drew back. "You've more sense than I have, Jill," she said bitterly. "You didn't fall for him, I did!"

"Maffie, for pity's sake tell me what you meant! I can't understand you. You said he is your husband!" Mafalda's teeth shut tight.

"I'm on the books of the Deptford register as his wife," said she. "That's all I know. I can't show you my marriage lines. I tore them across and put 'em on the fire."

Jill, appalled, rose to her feet. "It is true, then! How could he have dared! How could he have dared ask me—" might have been dead. And I'll bet now he wishes I was!"

"Maffie!"

Mafalda laughed.

"Sit down and I'll tell you about it, I'll make it short. You can take off that tragic face, Jill, an' hang it up—"

"—you've got it on the wrong place on the reel. You're the blonde heroine who's been saved from the bold, bad man; you want to register relief and thankfulness. I'm the goat, but I'm not kicking much."

SAY DRUGS CHIEF SECURED MILLION

Suspect Kept Under Guard Because Suicide Feared

(U. P. Leased Wire to The Bend Bulletin) CHICAGO, Aug. 11.—Colonel Will Gray Beach, deputy head of the federal narcotic division here, and three assistants "cleaned up" more than $1,000,000 in their alleged traffic in drugs with underworld characters, government agents declared today.

The four men awaited arraignment before a federal commissioner on charges that they had conspired to violate the laws they were hired to protect by conspiring to sell narcotics.

Beach admitted to officials that he had placed a large quantity of confiscated drugs in a church warehouse under his own name.

The cache is valued at the way up to $300,000.

Beach is under guard for fear he will attempt to commit suicide. He said he would never go to prison.

Boy Rangers Will Return From Camp on Wednesday

Completing their week in camp, boy rangers of Bend who have been at Scout lake for the past seven days will return to their homes in this city tomorrow. Today marks the end of the final week of the scouts' and rangers' training session at Scout lake. Thirty-two boys from Bend are attending the rangers' camp. Eight other boys are at the camp from Redmond and Prineville.

Kidnaped Members of British Ships Rescued When Soldiers Raid Native Ships

(U. P. Leased Wire to The Bend Bulletin) LONDON, Aug. 11.—A Central News Tien Tsin dispatch today reported eight persons had been wounded when Chinese police fired 200 shots into a mass of cotton mill strikers attacking the Yungta mill, owned by Chinese and managed by Americans. The strikers stoned the police and partly wrecked the mill in vainly trying to force workers to quit their positions, said the dispatch.

The riot was the culmination of a wage dispute which had been preceded by earlier minor disturbances. The message further reported that members of crews of British ships had been kidnaped but had been rescued when military raided trade union offices where they were sequestered.

Demonstrations were reported to have occurred also outside the premises of several Anglo-American firms.

County Nurse Quits Post; Board Appoints Successor

The resignation of Mrs. T. J. Quigley, formerly Miss Grace McDowell, as county nurse was accepted by members of the Deschutes county health association meeting in the office of J. Alton Thompson, county superintendent, Monday afternoon. Miss Georgia McKenzie was elected to fill the vacancy. Miss McKenzie will arrive here Saturday to report for duty. Routine business of the association was also discussed at yesterday's meeting.

Papers of Curry Merge Because of Money Lack

(U. P. Leased Wire to The Bend Bulletin) GOLD BEACH, Ore., Aug. 11.—The Curry county Reporter of Gold Beach, published by W. E. Haester, carries an announcement that the Port Orford Tribune has been merged with the Reporter because publication of the Tribune as a separate paper is no longer justified from a financial viewpoint. This leaves the Reporter the only newspaper published in Curry county.
