Love masters fear:—There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear. I John 4:18.

WHY THE ALARM?

Among a million, more or less, things which we are accustomed to view with alarm, one of the most common is America's trend from the country to the city—from agriculture to "non-productive" pursuits.

One of the most recent expressions of this thought appears in Herbert Quick's posthumous autobiography, "One Man's Life," now appearing in the Saturday Evening Post. This tendency, says Quick, may overthrow our civilization.

When we were in high school, the economic text book sought to set forth broad principles upon which economic changes took place—the laws of supply and demand and diminishing returns.

Without going into immediate causes, if the economists are right we must conclude that the movement from the country to the city is occurring because a better living is to be had in the city—at least according to the majority opinion of what constitutes a good living.

If that majority opinion is wrong, the solution is a matter of education or persuasion. If not, the next thought would be some sort of manipulation whereby farming would become more profitable.

But those same economists point out that mechanically improving conditions in one industry and forcing more capital and labor into it, can mean nothing but diminution of the earning power of that capital and labor.

The conclusion seems to be that the movement from country to city is part of an inevitable process of evolution, and if that evolution leads to an upheaval and from that back to savagery, that apparently is inevitable too.

LIFE'S IRONY

When I was young I dreamed my dreams, I would explore uncharted places, build campfires by unchristened streams, and mingle with the savage races. By Arctic igloos I would roam, and share the stately Bedouin's bounty; and I have never left my home or journeyed from my native county; I dreamed when young of knightly deed I would perform when I was bigger, of riding forth on coal-black steed, my hand upon a weapon's trigger; and I would rescue weeping maids, and show all kinds of pep and gumption; and here I toil with hoes and spades, producing greens for home consumption. I had my dreams of high estate, exalted spheres and princely capers; I would be classed among the great, my picture in the daily papers. Oh, I would ornament the bench, in senate halls I would be busy; and now I ply my monkey-wrench to fix my blamed old rusty Lizzie. Some men make good their youthful dreams, their eyes upon the heights before them, whereon the light eternal gleams, and no reverse can daunt or bore them. Our old friend Cal, for instance, grew to manhood on a homestead story; he dreamed, while feeding sow and ewe, and not a dream of his was phony. But most of us, when we are old, sigh o'er the dreams of fame and glory; they're threadbare fables, stale and cold, as idle as a gypsy's story.

Scent Grows Cold

Taylor was frightened and kept right on through the city of Chehalis, not reporting the affair until he reached Centralia, about 2 a. m. By this time the tip was "cold" and no trace of the men was found.

Police today issued warning to the public that it was quite likely the convicts separated on arriving in Portland.

As members of the Charles Newman family, who were forced to shelter the fugitives an entire day, told their story police became more convinced that a separation was probable.

Furthermore, police scoured the city so thoroughly without a trace of the desperadoes that they were ready to believe the convicts were well on their way elsewhere.

From the time Leslie Newman left them down town Monday night, where he was forced to drive them, until the affair was reported, would have given the fugitives ample time to get across the Columbia river bridge without any opportunity of being observed.

SEATTLE, Aug. 19.—What is described as a "regiment" of deputized manhunters literally swarmed over and around Bainbridge island, about eight miles west of here in Puget Sound—home of Tom Murray's mother. Murray is one of the Oregon penitentiary convicts that escaped and with two others are being hunted over the northwest Pacific country.

Pedigreed Cockerels

We have more cockerels than we need for our own use and will sell the surplus at about 25 per cent of value asked by the breeder for mature birds. They are out of a bunch of chicks purchased from Hanson's celebrated O. A. C. farm this spring; thrifty and fine; some are crowing now. Each has original wing band and pedigree, and from dams with frequent records of 200 to 300 eggs. They are the grade that Hanson sells at $5 to $15. We will sell our surplus at $2, if taken by August 19th, 4 for $10.
