

WEIRD STORY OF TRIP TOLD

Maud Back at Nome After Long Absence

Vessel, Frozen in Ice, at One Time Nearly Capsized Captain Reports

(U. P. Lensed Wire to The Bend Bulletin) NOME, Alaska, Aug. 24.—Returned from more than three years' imprisonment in the ice packs of the north, the Amundsen schooner Maud was in port here today with the six men detailing strange stories of their adventures.

The Maud ventured unsuccessfully into the Arctic regions, hoping to reach the north pole by drifting with the ice. Cross currents carried the vessel northwest instead of north, thwarting the aim of the expedition. But although the pole was not reached, Captain O. Westing and his men have none the less an interesting story of their adventures, which they related to the United Press for the first time.

With Captain Westing on the Maud were Chief Officer Carl Hansen, Chief Engineer and Radio Operator M. Olouk, Assistant Engineer A. Malmret, Assistant Engineer S. Syversten, Aviator O. Dahl and Dr. Harald Sverdrup, scientist of the party.

Assistant Engineer Syversten died July 28, 1923, from complications of diseases brought on by polar hardships. The body was wrapped in a Norwegian flag, covered with canvas and after funeral services were read by Captain Westing, the remains were lowered into the water through a four-foot hole in the ice.

"It was a severe strain on all the Maud's crew to see our shipmate go into Davy Jones' locker, especially with our only means of transportation locked in the ice and the probability we would never get out," the captain said.

The only Eskimo aboard the vessel deserted in the winter of 1923, taking with him a gun and a shovel. Land was 400 miles distant and the native headed in the wrong direction.

Days later he wandered back to the Maud, nearly frozen. The Eskimo was warned not to leave again under penalty of being placed in irons, but hardly needed the admonition. He was later landed at his home, East Cape Siberia.

No Progress Made The Maud, in its northwest drift, passed south of the Jeanette islands, 300 miles from the Herald island, thence toward the Bennett islands, where Captain Westing received orders to return to the United States.

This order came in 1923 but due to the huge icebergs which gripped the ship, no progress could be made. At one time the vessel was almost capsized, the captain and crew taking to the ice after loading the dog sleds with food and supplies and hitching the teams of 15 Siberian dogs, awaiting the Maud's loss.

"But we did not have to abandon ship after all," Captain Westing said. "The vessel was raised 20 feet out of the water by the ice pressure and had she not been solidly built would have been kindling wood in ten minutes. After being tossed about for two hours, the craft was released and settled back in the water on an even keel."

The coldest weather encountered was 70 degrees below zero. The furthest north the Maud drifted was latitude 77, longitude 146 east. Aviator Dahl tried out the Curtis plane aboard in 1923 but could not get a good straight-away on the rugged ice and the plane was wrecked. Dahl was not injured.

"The Arctic is no place for airplanes," Dahl commented. Seized for Debt Upon arrival here, the Maud was seized by United States Marshal Charles D. Jones, acting for the Standard Oil company, which claims a fuel debt against the ship. Bond was posted by Carl Lomen, who took possession of the Maud for the Norwegian government.

"The greatest thrill of the trip was when the marshal handed me the papers," Captain Westing said. Latest reports are that the Maud will remain here until the last of the week, the sail for Seattle.

"The Maud steamed into the north June 3, 1922, its men commanded by Captain Roald Amundsen, explorer, to permit the ship to become locked in the ice and drift whither the tides carried it.

The current carried the ship toward the northwest instead of toward the north, as had been hoped, frustrating the plan to reach the pole. Observations were taken bi-weekly.

Police Guard Streets When Gangster Buried

(U. P. Lensed Wire to The Bend Bulletin) WORCESTER, Mass., Aug. 24.—While state and local police guarded the nearby streets, funeral services for Walter Derosier, slum gangster, were held today at his home on the East side.

As a result of threatened interference by John Troy, head of the notorious "Troy gang," of which Derosier was a member, almost unprecedented precautions were taken by the authorities.

MAGEE AWAITS BIGGEST FIGHT

Judge Leahy Surprised by Editor's Shots

Trouble Resulting in Peacemaker's Death Result of Long Personal Enmity

(U. P. Lensed Wire to The Bend Bulletin) ALBUQUERQUE, N. M., Aug. 24.—Carl C. Magee, editor of the New Mexico State Tribune, nursing bruises he received at the hands of Judge David Leahy, today awaits one of the biggest fights of a stormy career.

Wednesday in East Las Vegas the editor will be given a preliminary hearing on a charge of murdering John B. Lassiter.

Lassiter was shot Friday night after Magee had been knocked to the floor in a hotel by Judge Leahy and who was pummeling him when he stepped up to intercede just as Magee fired at the judge.

Lassiter was killed and in two more shots fired by Magee, Judge Leahy was wounded in the arm. Magee suffered three broken ribs, cuts and bruises on the head.

Following the filing of charges Magee was released on $10,000 bond signed by eight Las Vegas citizens. Leahy has refused to make a statement.

His daughter, however, said that Leahy remarked he did not know Magee had a gun and was very much surprised when he began shooting. June Wheat, who was with Lassiter and Leahy, testified at the coroner's inquest that after the shooting Leahy had asked him for a gun "to go back and finish Magee."

The coroner's jury returned a verdict that Lassiter came to his death from a gun fired from the hand of Magee and made no recommendations. The fight between the editor and judge was the outcome of a long period of animosity.

Magee was twice tried in the district court of which Leahy was judge. In July, 1923, he was convicted of criminal libel but pardoned by the governor. He was then, in July of the next year, again sentenced by Leahy and served a day and a night in jail on contempt charges before being pardoned by the governor.

Another matter which somewhat worries that camp of hunters who are opposed to the pink pamphlet and swear by the 94 page book of Oregon game laws is a section in the white book. "It shall be unlawful to take, kill, capture or have in possession any bear in Jackson, Josephine and Klamath counties; provided, however, that it shall be unlawful to kill, capture, take and have in possession bear in Jackson, Josephine and Klamath counties from November 1 to November 30 of each year.

Just what is meant by this section is as clear to the Central Oregon sportsmen as the conflict of seasons in the two books of game laws, but it is believed that the second "unlawful" should have read "lawful".

Regardless of other conflicts, the two books of game laws agree that the deer season opens on both sides of the Cascades on September 10 and will remain open until October 20. The bag limit is two deer with horns.

Such is the manner in which the game commission has muddled the plans of local sportsmen. Those who want to hunt in September say that on the evening of September 15 they are going to migrate to the home of the waterfowl, equipped with a good shotgun and a copy of their favorite game laws. The shotgun will be for the waterfowl and the pink sheet of game laws for the officials of the game commission.

Two Accidents In Day Experience of Cyclist

Injured twice in one day in two traffic accidents, one of which took place when he was returning from the office of a physician where he had the injuries received in the first accident dressed, is the unusual experience of Ralph Nonemaker. The accidents occurred Sunday.

Accompanied by Miss Helen Joanas and Marguerite DeBoer, Nonemaker was driving in the vicinity of Redmond when his machine collided with that driven by Ralph Stevens. Both Nonemaker and Miss DeBoer suffered serious bruises, according to reports.

Following the accident, Stevens took Nonemaker to a physician in Bend. It was when they were returning from the visit to the physician that the Stevens motorcycle was struck by a car, bearing the Oregon license 193-716, at the corner of Delaware and Bond.

In the second accident of the series, Nonemaker suffered bruises to his legs. The injuries were so serious that it was necessary to take Nonemaker to his home in an automobile. Stevens suffered minor injuries.

It is said that Stevens had the right of way in the Bend accident. Since Porto Rico was annexed to the United States, in 1898, the island has increased its sugar production approximately 800 per cent.
