MILK INSPECTION AND SAFETY

Most inspection as a deterrent to cattle rustlers, as well as a health measure was advocated in this column yesterday. Today another sort of inspection is suggested—that of milk and dairies.

We haven't any idea that lack of inspection is going to induce unscrupulous persons to steal milk and deliver it in Bend, but there is one close analogy between the most inspection question raised Friday, and the dairy and milk inspection question raised today. That is the public health.

Of course, there is an inspection—a very thorough one, too, when it is made—but it is all too infrequent. It comes once or possibly twice a year when representatives of the state dairy and food commissioner's office visit Central Oregon on their tour of the state in search of evidence of violations of the statute.

Usually they get some evidence. Sometimes they bring to light deplorable conditions which may have existed, for all anybody knows, ever since the last visit. Then they get convictions and fines.

This is all very good. Mended punishment is proper. It is valuable when in addition to being punishment it acts as a corrective. But it does not always do this; neither does it reach back for half a year or 12 months and prevent the drinking of impure, dangerous milk at that time.

It should be unnecessary to mention that milk is one of our best disease carriers, if the health of the animal producing it is not up to normal or if sanitary conditions of dairies are not of the best.

Sometimes these faults exist through carelessness, sometimes through lack of knowledge. On the whole we believe that the majority of Deschutes county dairies will rate rather favorably, but it is in the minority, or in possible lapses from a high standard in the better class of dairies that danger to the public lies. It is to avert such danger rather than to punish violations of the law, that inspection is chiefly needed.

Popular recognition of the need came something like a year ago. The city council responded promptly, passing an ordinance which made admirable provisions for milk and dairy inspection. Of course, that didn't purify any milk or cleanse any dairies, or remove any tubercular cows from dairies. That required an inspector, for which the ordinance provided.

But there isn't any inspector, and there never has been. Let's have one.

A PANIC

It happened many years ago, when I was young and fair, and I was earning lots of dough, and had no dread or care. The country boomed, there was no sign of tragedy in sight, and everyone was feeling fine, in festal garb bedight. The people all were optimists, with sunshine on their brows; they earned good pay and with both fists they threw it to the cows. We all were buying things on time, the things we didn't need, and never paused to save a dime or other chickenfeed. A few back numbers shook their heads and warned us to be wise; they cried, "The giddy wastrel treads a path where danger lies." But coin was growing on the trees, or so it seemed just then; and prudence seemed a cheap disease designed for bloodless men. And then, as winter sometimes blights a landscape bright and fair, a panic came between two nights, and woe was everywhere. We lost our jobs, we glad some gents, who'd-blown our wages in, and now we couldn't pay the rents, or fill the yawning bin. I journeyed to my uncle's lair three times a week or so, and tried to seek the jimcracks there for which I'd spent my dough. And there I'd meet the gilded jays with whom I used to train, and they all wept o'er spend-thrift days, and shed their tears in vain. And I've been in a mournful group that shivered up the road, to get a little bowl of soup that charity bestowed. Now, if a panic came again, as it may come oftsoons, how many gay, joyriding men would have the price of prunes?

Repertoire Company Here After Two Years Interval

The Macy & Nord repertoire show company will open a return engagement in Bend next Thursday, erecting its tent at the corner of Bond street and Franklin avenue. Formerly known as Macy & Baird, the company appeared here two years ago, and its plays, featuring comedy first but with equally well developed drama, was well liked.

Macy & Nord are carrying this year 18 people with a five piece jazz orchestra. A new play and new vaudeville will be given each night for two weeks.

The company is featuring this week Miss Jean Ross as leading lady, who last winter played leading roles in the Maylon Players stock company of Spokane. Miss Ross was leading lady for Macy & Baird here two year ago.

TO TRY DIPLOMACY NEXT ON CHINESE

Negotiations Started With Bandit Captors

(U. P. Leased Wire to The Bend Bulletin) PEKING, Aug. 29.—Dispatch of armed forces having failed to rescue Dr. Harvey Howard, American, from his Chinese bandit captors, the American legation today decided to try diplomacy.

To this end, the legation dispatched its military attache, Captain Constant, to negotiate with the authorities at Kirin, Manchuria, in an attempt to secure the release.

Kirin advices this week said the captors of Dr. Howard of the Rockefeller foundation's Pekin hospital had eluded the troops who had drawn a ring around their camp and were a day ahead of the pursuers.

The above dispatch may signify that an offer of ransom is to be made, as this is generally regarded as one of the most effective means of obtaining captives from Chinese bandits. However, until recently the bandits had placed no price upon Howard and were using him to treat their ill.
