Armed with a pike pole, A. E. Hook, a diver at Port Townsend, Wash., battled an octopus on the sea's floor for an hour—and won the fight. The diver was repairing a fish net when he sighted the devilfish, which was carrying off one of five men who sank with a tugboat a few days before. The fish was cut to ribbons before the struggle was ended and Hook brought the body to the surface.

A Hero's Triumph

Back in New York from his flight to Paris, 25 year old Charles A. Lindbergh was acclaimed more spontaneously than was any other single individual in all human history. Here in Fifth avenue as he viewed it, perched atop the rear seat of an open car, with Mayor Walker of New York at his side, the fiercest gazed over a thundering sea of faces that were as countless as the cheers they chorused. The photographer was looking down Fifth avenue from Forty-second street.

Patterson, governor of Oregon, will be one of the principal speakers at ceremonies attending the dedication of the Crooked river bridge on July 15, according to the tentative program of speakers outlined today noon when the road committee of the Bend Chamber of Commerce met here with Judge J. Naval Conference Gets Down to Business Basis cost the American taxpayers $205,000,000 to meet the proposed treaty tonnage, plus $20,000,000 for more for guns and equipment.

Britain is already building 15 cruisers of the 10,000 ton type, compared with two this country is building and the six additional for which there is only a small initial appropriation. Under the American plan, no American destroyer or submarine construction would be required, but excess American ships of both types would be scrapped eventually to meet the proposed treaty limitations.

Most observers here predict congress will not make the full $250,000,000 appropriation necessary for the American navy to equal Britain's present 300,000 ton modern cruiser strength, regardless of the Geneva agreement.

The American plan provides a transitional period during which cruiser and destroyer totals may be grouped together, thus permitting the United States to maintain her present destroyer supremacy pending achievement of cruiser equality with Great Britain.

Officials here today, after studying official summaries of the British and Japanese plans, were hopeful the conference would result in a treaty.

On the basic American principle of extending the auxiliary ships of the United States, Great Britain and Japan, the 5-5-3 capital ship ratio of the Washington treaty, Great Britain is favorable though the Japanese position is not yet clear.

Only Japanese refusal to accept this ratio could now block a treaty, according to some officials here.

This government, it is said, will not agree to the British proposal for downward revision of capital ship specifications because France and Italy, though parties to the Washington capital ship treaty are not full members of the Geneva meeting.

But officials here anticipate Great Britain may withdraw the capital ship provisions of her plan when American objections are explained.

Some difficulty may develop over the British proposal for limitation of cruisers to 7,500 ton ships. The 10,000 ton type is more necessary for the United States than for Great Britain because the American navy has fewer naval bases and fuel stations.

But this considered largely a "paper" obstacle since any Geneva 5-5-3 treaty would allow the United States fifteen 10,000 ton cruisers to equal England.

Long before the United States finishes those 15 permitted new cruisers, the proposed Geneva treaty would be revised or dead, according to administration circles.

The British proposal for limiting the size of submarines is said to be agreeable to this government. As stated in the American treaty memorandum, the United States is willing to outlaw submarines if all other nations agree—though this appears impossible because of French objections and non-membership in the Geneva conference.

Minor disagreement may arise over British proposal to reduce guns on aircraft carriers from eight to six inch caliber.
