New Wire Cuts Down Loss of Electricity

Washington 409—Research work with complex mathematical equations at the national bureau of standards has resulted in the development of a new "easy flow" type wire cable for use in ignition equipment. Using steel wire in place of the traditional copper wire, the Washington Institute of Technology produced a wire cable with minimum resistance and "low capacitance." The technologists based their experiments with the new wire on a series of mathematical studies completed by Dr. Melville A. Peters, bureau of standards physicist. The new ignition wire gives a hotter, faster spark which lasts longer, thus cutting down on the amount of current necessary to start a gasoline engine. The navy used the new wire for two years in naval aircraft, and found it so satisfactory the wire until recently was kept on the navy's secret list. In starting an ordinary automobile, scientists calculated, the new wire makes it possible to save 30 per cent on the amount of current used. The cable consists of seven strands of stainless steel.

"PAUL REVERES" ORGANIZED Pittsfield, Mass. 409—The county commissioners have organized a "Paul Revere corps" to patrol county streams regularly and warn citizens of rising waters in flood times. The men will be paid 62 1/2 cents hourly while on duty.
