

Redmond to Meet Bend Here Tonight With Chance to Upset Dope

Title Hopes of Bears at Stake Burns Looms Ahead as Biggest Rival

Redmond, a battling team that held Bend to a six point victory on January 27, will come here tonight to challenge Bend's right to represent the Burns-Redmond-Bend triangle in the 1939 district tournament that will open in Klamath Falls on March 3. Redmond is just about out of the sub-district race, but the Panthers by walloping Bend here tonight could make things nice for the Burns cagers, who face the Bears in Bend on Friday night in sub-district championship play.

Tonight's game, to start at 8 o'clock following a preliminary between the senior team and the Bend reserves, will have a direct bearing on the sub-district championship. In sub-district games already played, Burns has won two and lost none, Bend has lost one and won one and Redmond has had two and won none. That gives Burns a standing of 1,000, Bend 500 and Redmond 000. By winning here tonight, Bend will remain as an obstacle to Burns.

In the southern end of the district, Klamath Falls clinched the sub-district championship by defeating Lakeview in week end play and now is preparing for the invasion of the northern contender. At present, Burns, by virtue of its two "no count" victories and one other which over the Bears this season is very definitely out in the lead. This is the first season that Burns has taken part in northern district play. Previously, Burns has been in an eastern Oregon district.

However, Coach John Londahl and his Bears are more worried about the Redmond threat than the Burns menace at present, for the coach and players have not forgotten their January 27 battle with Redmond. The game ended with Bend ahead 32 to 26, but that score did not reveal the full fury of the battle.

In that January 27 game, Redmond tied the Bend shooters, 26 to 26, in the fourth quarter as Damewood dropped a howitzer into the basket. Not until the closing minutes of play were the Bears able to draw ahead to victory. Damewood's long shots were factors in keeping Redmond in that torrid race.

Coach Bill Kenna will probably start Nichols and Hiatt in the forward positions against Bend tonight, with Kilgore probably at center. Damewood and Hall are Kenna's guards.

Coach Londahl announced this morning that he will start Rukaveno and Clapp at forward, Douglass at center and Ness and D. Currie, in the guard berths. Freshman Douglass was high point man in the Klamath game here Saturday night.

Honolulu, T. H., Feb. 21 (UP)—If you are listed in Loyds, and have a reasonable tonnage, waterline and rigging, then you are fairly safe in accepting an invitation from a native Hawaiian to do what is known as body surfing in this territory of the United States.

Not too safe, mind you, because there are gentlemen down here who will swim out half a mile or more and defy a sea that would turn the Normandy and Queen Mary back into harbor and bring out storm warnings from Hatteras to Bangor.

Unless you are very careful they will get you out there, too, for a bit of body surfing. To tell them that you don't swim very well doesn't mean a thing, because the average inhabitant of these American islands can stay in the water five and six hours without touching bottom, and he interprets the expression "poor swimmer" as one who stays afloat no more than three hours. He has no conception of the likes of me and you who, after ten minutes of swimming, have but two alternatives—a rest or the pulmotor.

Body surfing—and it is almost as popular as surfing in and around Hawaii—is very simple in theory. All there is to it is to swim out where waves higher than a still-water in a high hat are breaking, and, using your neck, chest, abdomen, thigh, fibia, tibia and big toe as a surfboard, pop on top of them. Little waves won't do. The rollers at Waikiki, for example, are of no use. Body-surfers scorn them, and wouldn't be caught in them. They go to a spot on the island known as Makupu where great, tough waves, with long police records pound against the beach.

Good body-surfers, the experts who, in their search for big waves, go out so far they have to stop for quarantine inspection coming in toward shore, think nothing of riding a wave half a mile. This sort of thing is pure murder for a Malihini, or newcomer, and no native, even if he were your worst enemy, would ask you to do it. To accomplish it, a man must be an extraordinary strong swimmer, be able to hold his breath long enough to span two legal holidays, and be touched with the same sort of madness that inspired the first man to walk across Niagara on a tight rope.

It is a beautiful thing to see, though, a man coming in on the crest of a 40-foot wave, arms out like the wings of a bird, riding free, with only nature at the controls. With his feet and arms out, he glides himself as surely as if he were equipped with a rudder, and, occasionally, when a wave breaks while he is on top of it and threatens him with a violent and dangerous descent to the bottom, he turns a somersault and lands on his feet—ahead of the wave.

Out Our Way

I went body surfing at Makupu with Walter MacFarlane, one of the most skillful men at the sport in the territory. He started me out in little waves—little fellows scarcely big enough to sweep away the superstructure of an ocean liner. When they had beat me into a pulp he graduated me into the intermediate or typhoon wave class, which not only gives a fellow a devil of a fine ride but also has the advantage of bringing his entire past into view. While morticians stood on the beach and watched for the handling of my remains Walter took me even farther out—into the passenger liner zone—where, by rights, I should have been equipped with a captain, a first mate, first class staterooms, tourist class, and a sun deck.

I don't remember anything after this. The fact that I am here writing this column today is a tribute to Walter, and not to me.

CUNNINGHAM LOSE IN 1,000-YARD RUN

Will Try Two Mile Race With Don Lash

New York, Feb. 21 (UP)—Glenn Cunningham, mile specialist defeated last night at 1,000 yards, said today he would step out of his class again March 1 to meet Don Lash at two miles in the footracing feature of the indoor track season.

Invincible at a mile, Cunningham sought competition at 1,000 yards and found too much of it in Johnny Borican, middle-distance sensation of the year, in the main attraction of the Seton Hall games at Newark, Borican, lanky Elberton, N. J., negro, scored his eighth victory in 10 starts.

The Cunningham-Lash meeting, a special feature of the 1. C. 4-A games at Madison Square Garden, threatens to steal some of the spotlight from the National A. A. U. indoor championships at the Garden Saturday night. The race will send the holders of the world indoor mile and two mile records against each other at a distance favoring Lash.

It is a test that track fans have been talking about for several seasons, but the promoters couldn't get Cunningham to sign for the longer haul. Frequently Lash has cut his speciality in half to try and give Cunningham a race, but so far has been unable to gain a victory.

Glenn holds the world indoor record at 1,000 yards, the distance at which he was outclassed by Borican last night. His flame-scarred legs carried him to a 2:10.1 record in March 1935.

With no special training for less than a mile, Glenn trailed Borican last night by five yards. The Jersey negro broke the tape in 2:14.3, a record for the flat track at Newark armory.

Lash took a beating in his own two mile backyard last night, but most observers believed he was experimenting with the last lap kick manter that enabled him to win the N. Y. A. C. title last week. Little Tommy Deckard, former University of Indiana running mate of Lash, popped into the lead with a half mile to go and Don's bell-lap sprint was not enough to close the huge gap.

Don had a hard run on his hands to keep Joe McCluskey, N. Y. A. C. veteran, out of second place. Deckard's time of 9:15.2 was more than six seconds slower than Lash's time in taking the N. Y. A. C. title.

Pierce Is Hopeful of Funds For Deschutes

Walter M. Pierce, representative from the second Oregon district, is confident that the Deschutes project will be allotted $500,000 for work during the next fiscal year, according to word received in Central Oregon. In a letter to George H. Brewster, attorney for the Central Oregon Irrigation district, Pierce explained that the bureau of reclamation, after at first holding that ample funds had been allotted to the Deschutes to carry on the work another year, reviewed the situation and found that all but $109,000 would be contracted by June 30. This was reported to the budget bureau, Pierce said, with a recommendation for an allotment of $500,000.

If the budget bureau recommends the allotment in time, the fund will be added to the reclamation allotment in the house bill. If there is not time for that, Pierce said, Senator Rufus Holman of Oregon will be asked to add the $500,000 to the bill in the senate. If both those plans fail, Pierce will attempt to get the allotment into the first deficiency bill in the house.

Oregon City Street Case in High Court

Salem, Or., Feb. 21 (UP)—The state supreme court today denied a motion to dismiss an appeal by Oregon City in the city's suit against the Security and Investment company to quiet title to street ends along the Willamette river.

The street ends, lying between Water street and the river on Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Eighth, Ninth and Tenth streets, are needed for a new highway. The company, owned by the Latourette interests, claims title by virtue of deeds from the heirs of Dr. John McLoughlin, who laid out the town and filed claim to its property in 1850.

The city was ruled against in the original suit, which was backed by state highway commission. It was the highway commission which elected to appeal the decision. The company moved to have the appeal dismissed, and it was that motion which was denied today.
