Crater Lake Park Is Exempt from License

Portland, Ore., Feb. 21 (AP)—The Crater Lake National Park company was free today to sell beer on its own property independent of state liquor laws.

Federal Judges James A. Fee and Claude McCulloch late Monday ruled that the state was without jurisdiction.

The court refused, however, to grant the company an injunction against the Oregon liquor control commission on grounds there was no cause for such action.

Judge Bert E. Hamey of the U. S. circuit court of appeals, who sat with the other two judges, dissented and expressed belief the case should be dismissed on the ground the court lacked jurisdiction.

The court cited a decision in a similar case in which the United States supreme court held that the federal government has exclusive jurisdiction in regulating liquor traffic in Yosemite National park.

Colored Slides Show Life of Washington

Colored stereopticon views obtained from Oregon State college and dealing with the life of George Washington were shown at today's meeting of the Bend club of Lions in connection with a Washington's Rev. John B. Coan. The views illustrated the life of the first president from boyhood to the grave. The views included a number of world-famous paintings, including the crossing of the ice-filled Delaware and the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown.

W. L. Allen, president of the Lions, was in charge of the meeting.

SILENT VISITOR BAFFLES POLICE

Three year old Ronald Eugene Stone, who lives at the corner of Olney and East Fourth streets, went for a morning stroll today and had the pleasure of meeting state and city officers, as well as visiting police headquarters, where he was the guest of Patrolman Ray Rademacher for more than four hours.

After strolling westward across the railroad track this morning, Ronald first met Sergeant Horace Betts of the state police staff. Unable to learn the boy's name or where he lived, the sergeant turned Ronald over to Patrolman Rademacher.

Rademacher refused to talk in the police station, where he shyly sat in a big chair and chewed gum. Attorney Robert Foley was called in, but found all refusal to talk to him. Offers of food during the noon hour were rejected by Ronald, but a bit of candy was accepted.

Ronald did admit that he lived "up on the hill," so Patrolman Rademacher shortly after 2 p. m. took him for a ride. The three year old was able to point to the proper turns and Rademacher finally reached the boy's home.

"A mighty fine pilot, but not very talkative," Patrolman Rademacher was quoted as referring to Ronald following the successful homeward drive.

BUND PROGRAM STORMY AFFAIR

Huge Crowd Gathers to Battle Police

By Earl B. Steele (United Press Staff Correspondent)
New York, Feb. 21 (AP)—An American meeting of the pro-Nazi German-American Bund, attended by 18,000 persons and featured by tributes to George Washington and denunciations of Jews, ended shortly before midnight last night with salutes to swastikas and the singing of the Nazi anthem, "Horst Wessel."

Outside Madison Square Garden, policemen had a six-hour struggle with throngs of anti-nazis who repeatedly charged their lines trying to fight their way inside.

Although there were numerous individual fights, none was seriously injured. The scene was arrested, including leaders Greenbaum, 23, a sanitary engineer, who rushed the speaking platform in an attempt to attack Fritz Kuhn, national Bund leader, and was severely beaten by Bund storm troopers. Greenbaum's trousers were torn off.

Traffic was halted completely in a six block area most of the night and it was estimated at one time that a crowd of 100,000 was in the neighborhood.

Police Commissioner Lewis J. Valentine commanded 1,700 policemen at the scene, the largest force ever detailed to one task in the city's history.

The climax of the demonstration arrived when Bund members, leaving the hall, were attacked on the sidewalk in a score of individual encounters.

The meeting, widely advertised as a George Washington birthday rally for Bundists and sympathizers, failed to produce the serious rioting and bombing predicted for it. Several hundred uniformed storm troopers, in brown or gray shirts, commanded the interior of the building, with the aid of 750 policemen.

American flags, swastikas and banners carrying such slogans as "stop Jewish domination of Christian Americans" decorated the hall. In the lobby, copies of Rev. Charles E. Coughlin's publication "Social Justice" were hawked by boys. Storm troopers wore civilian overcoats concealing their uniforms, but once inside discarded the coats, arranged themselves in formations and took orders from their leaders in German.

Kuhn denounced the new deal spending program for relief, accused "diabolical Harold Ickes" of attacking Nazi Germany without cause. "Americanism should be returned to the Christians who founded it," he said. "We must defy those who turned this country into a bolshevik paradise."

"We do not say all Jews are communists but we do say that the Jew is the driving force of communism." He read a roll of those whom he blamed for America's troubles. They included "the Brandeises, the Baruches and the Untermyers who sent thousands of American boys to France to die under the slogan of 'make the world safe for democracy.'

Outside, the crowd of anti-nazis strained at the lines held by mounted policemen. Just as the meeting inside was starting a loudspeaker began broadcasting an anti-nazi speech from the second floor of a rooming house. Policemen found the room empty, the voice coming from a record playing device that had been set off by a time clock.

As the tempo of the street crowd grew menacing, the orchestra from the show "I Must Love Someone" left the pit of the Longacre theater stood on the sidewalk and played the Star Spangled Banner in an effort to soothe it.

The next incident inside the hall was the ejection of Dorothy Thompson, newspaper columnist and wife of Sinclair Lewis, who wrote the novel, "It Can't Happen Here." Storm troopers complained that Miss Thompson had laughed during one of the speeches. Policemen escorted Miss Thompson outside, but readmitted her in a few minutes when they learned she had come to report the meeting.

"We came here because it was a public meeting," she explained. "At such meetings one may react as one chooses so we laughed. I laughed because these nazis were exercising the free speech which one day they would deny everyone."

Miss Thompson continued to laugh at the speakers. Policemen had tried to hold the crowd at least two blocks from the Garden, but were overwhelmed several times.
