FRIGHT LONG USED AS WEAPON OF WAR

Face-Painting, Shrieking Earliest Methods

Washington, D. C. (Special)—Fright in the present European conflict, as excited by propaganda, by the use of flame-throwing devices, by the shriek of dive bombers and other instruments designed to shatter the morale of the enemy, is about as old as warfare itself, says a bulletin from the National Geographic society.

"When Julius Caesar landed his forces in England, 54 B. C., he found the Britons in a war paint of dark blue which gave them an awesome appearance," says the bulletin. "Even Caesar said the effect was terrifying. This practice of painting the face and body in ghastly colors was common to many warlike tribes, including American Indians."

"Attempts to frighten the enemy were often designed also to vanquish a warrior's own fear. The war whoop of the Indian was probably thus dual in its effect, supplementing the war dance which was definitely to arouse the emotions of the Indian to abandon in battle."

"When the Irish of the 16th century attacked invading English forces, the woods would ring with their frightful war cry, described as 'Oo-booboo.' This cry was later translated into no worse a word than 'hubbub.'"

"Early helmets in the form of animal heads, such as a lion's head with the teeth grinning at the enemy from the forehead of a warrior, were doubtless worn to unnerve the enemy; they were followed by helmets with horns of goats and other animals, later replaced by brass horns."

PARROT RODE IN COVERED WAGON

Bird's Age Estimated at Over 80 Years

Denver (UP)—Pat Well-Well's dog everthing from exchanging oaths with a band of hardy pioneers to matching repartee with hardened criminals. He has no use for strange people, but there's a soft spot in his parrot's heart for every canary.

Pat, who crossed the plains many years ago in a covered wagon, was a Mexican parrot owned by Mrs. Jane Floto of the Denver circus family, and before that to a warden of the Montana state penitentiary.

Although Pat says little but "well, well," Mrs. Reid explains that if he had a better command of English he might tell some mighty interesting tales of his experiences.

"Pat has no use for strange people, but an incident which occurred when he was en route out west many years ago in a wagon train shows his love for canaries," she said. "The train became lost in a howling western blizzard, and Pat and a canary, quartered in one of the wagons, became lost."

"However, the next morning Pat was found buried beneath some equipment in a wagon, the canary tenderly tucked beneath his wing. He still likes canaries, and makes much over them every chance he gets."

Experts estimate Pat's age at from 80 to 100 years.

After his trip west and annexation by the prison warden, Pat was allowed to wander at will through the corridors of the institution. From this fact, she believes, stems his dislike for people, as the prisoners undoubtedly "tormented the life out of him."

Pat has a weak heart, and even a minor operation like clipping his nails fags him so completely that he must be given frequent rest periods.
