though a provision might be written that no funds for Bonneville can be used for substations in the future.

The question is under discussion whether the ugly duckling ships to be constructed on Willamette river for the maritime commission will be armed. Privately owned merchant ships under the American flag are to be armed, according to current plans, with a couple of guns. Those vessels will sail the Pacific to the Far East, bringing to the west coast such raw materials as tin, tungsten, chromite, rubber and other heavy cargo and taking over the routes which have been developed by British lines. Practically all the guns are made in the navy yard at Washington, D. C., on a three-shift basis.

Another matter Bill Knudsen is working on are contracts for the Scotch boilers and reciprocating engines to power the ugly ducklings. He wants the boilers and engines ready for installation when a ship slides down the ways. There is also the matter of lifeboats, and no subcontract has been let for these. Lifeboats can be turned out in mass production in a number of shops from Astoria to Vancouver, Portland and way points.

Senator Bone and Representative Leavy of Washington, Nebraska's Norris and Representative Rankin, Mississippi, franked thousands of government-ownership pamphlets to the registered voters of Spokane urging them to vote for municipal ownership. Many of those pamphlets accused the Washington Water Power company of spending large sums of money to organize against the election proposal. Administrator Raver of Bonneville and his entourage went to Spokane and advocated municipal ownership, with power coming from Grand Coulee. The federal power commission issued a report on private utilities in Washington state, with particular attention to the Spokane company, regarding funds to be used in the election, and this report was distributed in the Spokane area. Despite those efforts of the so-called power bloc and the government employees, Spokane rejected municipal ownership. The legislators can't understand why their speeches and pamphlets were disregarded.

President Roosevelt is behind a movement to change the immigration laws to permit German and Polish refugees to enter United States. Most of the refugees, it appears, are lawyers, doctors and merchants, no farmers. . . . Lack of interest in vital legislative matters is shown by the small attendance in the house and senate when bills are passed appropriating billions of dollars. If anyone suggested the absence of a quorum it would be difficult to round up enough members. Attitude of members is that the committee in charge of the bills knows all about them; that they will pass anyway.
