FREE INDIA

India, achieving political freedom, has still a far greater struggle before it becomes truly free. Its people, still enslaved by superstition, goaded to violence by religious intolerance, withheld from unity by conflicting creeds and by the walls of caste within those creeds are in a sorry state indeed.

Even in the gaining of freedom the seeds of dissonance, even of actual warfare, have been sown. There is not one independent state, but two; the one India, largely of Hindu persuasion, the other Pakistan, dominantly Moslem.

With all its richness, India is a land of famine and famine, more terrifying than before, will stalk anew behind the warring armies adding to the toll of death exacted by fanatics in the name of religion.

India is free, free to war and to be warred against, free to work out its own salvation, but unable and unwilling to take the steps which could lead to peace and the prosperity and well being of which its leaders dreamed.

TIME FOR RENEWED CAUTION

Shorter days, cooler nights and the appearance of football schedules all herald the approach of autumn, but it will be later, perhaps much later, that the season of fire danger will have passed.

To date an unusually fine job has been done by the custodians of the forests and by those who frequent them in preserving the wooded areas for their own continued use and for the use of others.

Consciousness of these things has no doubt been one of the factors prompting care instead of carelessness and leading to noteworthy achievements in preservation.

Monday afternoon we were approached by an active member of the property owners association with a request for permission to place in a window a poster urging voters to register.

Woman Mayor Wants Women To Study Politics

Avalon, N. J. (UP)—New Jersey's only woman mayor thinks every woman should take an intelligent interest in politics. Mayor Edith M. Greenan, of Avalon, considers voting by women "a duty to be performed only if they study both government and politics."

Washington Column

By Peter Edson (NEA Washington Correspondent)

Washington, D. C. — When young Brig.-Gen. Charles E. Saltzman takes over as assistant secretary of state for occupied areas, he will assume policy-making responsibility for a military government that is currently running over $1 billion a year in the red.

All Saltzman will have to do in the next few years is try to liquidate the business or come as close as he can to making it break even. It's a terrific job even for a vice president of the New York Stock Exchange, which is what Saltzman gave up to come to Washington.

Hilbring has been into it up to his ears for over five years. In the war department, before he moved to State, he shaped policies for the first military government in occupied areas.

Looking back on the record, he can point to the fact that the United States has stuck to the same objective all the way through. This was to try to make the enemy countries into democracies. The methods of trying to achieve that objective have been changed from time to time—from the original directive 1067, to the Potsdam declaration, to the Byrnes-Stuttgart policy, to the recently revised 1067 and on to the Marshall plan now being worked out.

General Hilbring believes that the U. S. can take pride in the fact that the governments of the American zones in Germany, Austria, Japan and Korea are most successful and most popular with the people.

There comes a time, however, when military government wears out. General MacArthur has been doing some talking on that in Japan. He puts the time limit between three and five years.

That points up the need of two things. First, shifting government of the occupation zones from military to civilian control. That is now being worked on. In due time the state department will take over this job from the war department, though army police will remain. Second is the making of peace treaties with Japan and Germany.

The Jap treaty is not expected to cause great difficulty, because in Japan, the U. S. has major control. If Russia doesn't want to go along, the other Allies can make separate peace. German peace is something else again.

In the meantime, much can be done to build up the German economy. The problem is economic first, political second. It becomes a political problem—how to handle communism—only if the business life of Germany is allowed to collapse completely.

Management of the two combined zones, to make them self-supporting by 1951, was set up on a 50-50 basis. If the British want the U. S. to pay more of the costs—and indications seem to point that way—that will raise the issue of whether the U. S. will have proportionately greater control.

The French, in the long run, are expected to come along. French leaders are still making speeches against revival of German industry—for political purposes. In the desire to liquidate the costly American occupation of Germany, there may be some noisy demand here at home to turn the job of running western Europe over to the French. They have done a good job in their own zone. It is self-supporting. But any thought of turning the
