Fine Levied for Water Pollution

P. H. Talley, of near Redmond, appeared Wednesday afternoon before Circuit Judge Ralph S. Hamilton and entered a plea of guilty to an indictment returned by the grand jury Tuesday afternoon, charging Talley with pollution of domestic water. He was fined $100.

Talley stated that although he was aware that he was guilty of the offense charged, there were so many other similar offenders going unapprehended that he should be allowed leniency.

District Attorney Robert H. Faley stated that Talley's farm near Redmond had been investigated by health officers, who found that he allowed approximately 1,000 turkeys access to an irigation ditch which supplied drinking water to several other families.

"I am aware," declared the district attorney, "that Mr. Talley is not the only offender. But the health officer has been instructed to continue his investigations to the end that pollution of drinking water in the irrigation ditches of Deschutes county may be ended."
