Road Betterment Work Projected

Realignment of The Dalles-California highway between Terbonne and Crooked river after the war will result in the abandonment of a two-mile section, this abandoned strip to be turned over to Deschutes county, C. L. Allen, county judge, revealed today following a conference with Oscar Cutler, assistant staff engineer for the state highway department.

The unit of the highway, No. 97, proposed for realignment includes the Terrebonne section.

Don Peoples, executive secretary of the chamber of commerce, was also consulted by Cutler about publicity regarding the future road improvements.

In charge of the travel and information department of the highway commission, Cutler told Peoples that there has been very favorable response to the advertisements of Oregon's recreation advantages in national publications, and he disclosed that more than 20,000 inquiries about Oregon recreation have been received by the highway commission this year.

The new Oregon state highway map will not be out until the middle of October due to the paper shortage, it was announced by Peoples.

Cannery Changes Weekly Schedule

The Redmond community cannery, which has been open for the convenience of patrons on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday from 8 a. m. to 2 p. m., will change its operation schedule after next week, and will be open on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, directors announced today. Appointments may be made by calling the cannery at 98-2, or B. F. Beck, Redmond.

Vegetables should be brought to the plant direct from farm or garden, and all preparation must be done in the cannery, it was stressed. An electric pea sheller has been installed to shorten the time required in the processing of peas, according to the supervisor, B. F. Beck.

Approximately 500 cans of beets, peas, and apricots have been processed by 25 patrons this week, Beck said.

Mineral Students View Collection

Deschutes Geology club members met last night at the home of C. H. Springer, on Roosevelt avenue, and, following a potluck lunch, inspected one of Bend's outstanding mineral collections, composed of specimens gathered by Springer in many parts of Oregon. After dusk, a fluorescent light was used to inspect the minerals and a number of specimens were found to react under the ultra-violet rays.

Springer is prospector of road materials for the state highway department, and his work takes him to many localities never before surveyed for mineral. One of the most interesting parts of the state, Springer told the minerals club, is the far southeastern section of Oregon.

U. S. Products Expected to Stop Soviet Imports

By Robert S. Walters
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

Washington (UP)—The United States stands a good chance of becoming the leading selling nation to the Soviet Union after the war, according to official trade analysts.

Before the war the United Kingdom led all the countries in purchasers of Russian goods while Germany sold the most to the Soviet Union. But now it appears that the United States will outstrip all competitors for Soviet trade.

The Soviet Union will have a tremendous need for capital goods—oil equipment (from drilling to refining), electrical manufactures, steel, chemicals, railroad equipment, ships and shipbuilding techniques. (Eric Johnston, U. S. chamber of commerce president, said that during his recent tour of Russia, officials talked in terms of buying billions of dollars worth of American goods.)

It is known that the Soviet Union is interested in obtaining commercial credits in the United States. In addition, Russia has gold stocks and foreign currency for making trade payments.

U. S. May Sell $350 Million

Some sources believe that Soviet exports and imports after the war may total one billion dollars in value, with the United States selling annually as much as $350 million dollars worth of goods.

Before the war, trade between the Soviet Union and the United States had reached sizeable proportions. U. S. exports to Russia ranged in value from 80 to 100 million dollars a year, while imports from Russia were around 25 to 30 millions a year. The United States usually had a favorable trade balance of 4 to 1.

Trade analysts do not view Russia as a strong competitor of the United States and Britain, for example, in world markets after the war, but point out that she will have to sell a considerable amount of goods abroad to pay for imports she vitally needs.

Wide List of Exports

There are scores of commodities which Russia hopes to sell in the United States, but these are the most important: furs (including seal skins), fish, crabmeat, bristles, caustic soda, chemicals, chrome concentrate, tobacco (for blending with domestic types), cow, horse and other small hair (for upholstery), coal, flax, leather (kid and goat), licorice root, lumber, manganese, magnesite, mathes, mica, platinum, plywood, pulpwood, rugs, sausage casings and oil seeds.

The possibilities of the Russian market are widely recognized. British manufactures already are in touch with Soviet representatives. Sweden has indicated her interest in postwar trade with Russia, while the Czechoslovak-Soviet Union mutual assistance treaty (December, 1943) calls for "extensive economic co-operation" between the two countries.

Some persons have compared Russia of today with the United States of the 19th century, drawing the analogy from her need to develop inland transport and heavy industry and her plans for encouraging mass production. Trade analysts feel that American goods and services will be an important factor in Russian reconstruction and economic development.

Deschutes Behind In Bond Campaign

Forrest E. Cooper, assistant manager of the Oregon war finance committee and supervisor of the war bond program of 19 counties of eastern and southern Oregon, after making a telephone check-up from Bend Friday morning, found that all counties in eastern and southern Oregon have made their E Bond quotas except Deschutes. Most of the counties west of the mountains are within shooting distance of their marks, he said, and expect to go over after July pay roll deductions are made on July 25.

That the drive came at an inopportune time was Cooper's comment, but he emphasized that it was inopportune for all counties also, and that by intensive solicitation Oregon is a cinch to make its E bond quota in amounts sufficient to take care of Deschutes county's present deficit of $140,000, he continued, the state war finance committee is hopeful that Deschutes will still come through. Bank deposits and especially savings deposits totals in this city indicate that funds are available, Cooper revealed. He also disclosed that landslide E bond sales of as high as $92,000 in one day in Grants Pass and of more than $150,000 in one day at The Dalles indicate that Deschutes county does not face an impossible task, if the folks roll up their sleeves and pitch in.

All E bonds reported by Deschutes issuing agents on or before July 31 at 3 p. m. at the Federal Reserve bank in Portland will count in the county's total, Cooper concluded.
