

United Nations Flag in Schools On V-Day Urged

Washington (AP)—Youthful Betsy Rosses in schools throughout the country are being urged to stitch United Nations honor flags for special classroom ceremonies when Germany falls.

Display of this flag, along with the American flag, is one of the many V-E-day exercises recommended by the National Education Assn. Emphasis will be on United Nations unity.

The honor flag is designed to mark the joint victory of the 44 united and associated nations. Rectangular in shape, it bears four upright red bars—symbolic of the four freedoms—emblazoned on a white background. It is about half the size of the American flag and is displayed beneath it.

The NEA has distributed special pamphlets to schools with instructions for putting the flag together. School children will use materials supplied in classrooms.

Display of the flag would be accompanied by the recitation of a special pledge which is to be repeated following the pledge of allegiance to the U. S.

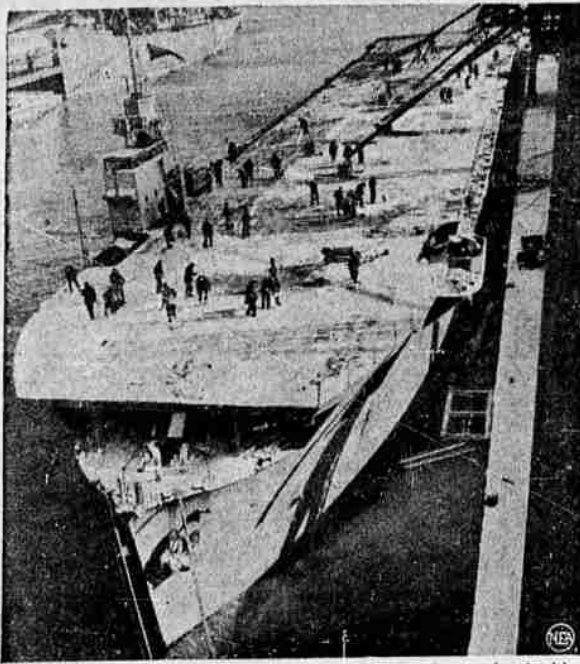

"And I display the United Nations honor flag in appreciation of all those who are my country's friends and allies, and who are dedicated with her to the common ends of peace, freedom and humanity."

Flown at Dumbarton Oaks

The honor flag was first raised to the top of a flagpole at Dumbarton Oaks on June 20, 1943. Since then it has been reported flying in many places throughout the world. On Memorial day, 1944, it was displayed at the tomb of the unknown soldier to pay honor to those who have given their lives in common cause with Americans.

Representatives of the United Nations feel that the meaning of the flag will be greatly enhanced if it is displayed by the people themselves instead of the government instituting its use. "Of all the groups throughout the world it would seem that the schools can best lead in this glorious and wholesome project. Students have most to gain by winning and maintaining the peace. By enthusiastically promoting the two-flag idea they can help to influence the thinking of the world and thereby the future of humanity," the NEA said.

Canada's Double-Duty Carrier

Pigmy aircraft carriers, like the one pictured above do double duty for the Royal Canadian Navy—serving as cargo ships and as bases for aircraft protecting convoys against U boats. In photo above taken at a Canadian port, crew members clear snow off flight deck of converted merchant ship while toward stern long grain funnels deliver 7000 tons of wheat into the hold.

It Sells Twice As Fast When It's Displayed

As every retailer knows, merchandise always sells faster when it's displayed. When people see a product, they're twice as likely to buy. That's why smart manufacturers keep showing your customers the products you sell... by displaying them in ads in your newspaper. And when your own store displays feature the same products your manufacturers advertise in the paper, then you've got super-selling power!
